"When will Philadelphia be attacked? This great question had been on the lips of all military leaders in America since the recovery of Boston. Here, in this the most important and sophisticated city in the states, was the seat of the new Republican government. In those fascinating suburban mansions bordering the Schuylkill River, the great men of the Revolution supped with one another formulating plans and pondering the problems of independence. Doubtless many a straddler was won over to the cause under the genial influence and eloquent persuasion of the glittering candlelight. Philadelphia was a city known the world over for its cleanliness, its orderly layout, its handsome buildings, and great institutions and markets. It was to remain the manufacturing metropolis until as late as 1800. Ships brought to its wharves the good things of the world and the fertile farms of the surrounding Pennsylvania countryside poured a lavish supply of agricultural products into it daily.

The loss of this city would be 'severely felt by the common cause and would wound the heart of every virtuous American,' wrote Washington in 1776. Again early the next year he wrote, 'With what propriety can he (Howe) miss so favourable an opportunity of striking a capital stroke against a city from which we derive so many advantages, which would give such eclat to their arms aml strike such a damp upon ours.'

"Everyone at the time had thought that Howe, of course, would have followed up his advance across the Jersies with the seizure of the Continental Capital. It was well within reason and he has since been criticised, even hy his countrymen, for not so doing. What Washington dreaded most was Howe's cue for success. Instead Howe had halted at Trenton and given Washington the opportunity of that most signal success on Christmas of 1776. The year of 1777 was therefore ushered in with some promise and the outlook further brightened by the complete retirement of the British in June into New York. Many a Continental head was turned by this seeming success. Many—but not Washington, whose calmness and sagacity made it posimpossible for him to be unduly carried away. He anxiously awaited the next move.

"Our army was destined not to enjoy any lengthy respite for it was immediately beset by as great a quandary as ever invested an armed force. As a rule, Washington was most unusually well acquainted with the plans of the royal troops. Such now was not the case and their movements were shrouded in deepest mystery. All that was known was that the British fleet was being made ready to transport the army to some distance."

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

The question of debt cancellation has now been put squarely up to the United States by the European nations which owe us the money. There is little doubt that the American people through their government will give a quick and decisive answer. This answer will be against cancellation. There can be little surprise that this is the case. When the people think of the amount of money which the supposedly hard-pinched European nations are spending each year for military preparations, they properly have little patience with the pleas of poverty which come from across the waters. Expressions of senators and congressmen in both political parties, leave little doubt that a proposition for cancellation would have little support in our national legislative body.

President Hoover very properly asked President-elect Roosevelt to consult with him about the whole debt question. Both candidates and both parties have expressed themselves as against cancellation. But President Hoover will go out of office on March 4 next, and the vexing debt question will be with us much longer. It was right and proper therefore that Mr. Roosevelt's views on the question be obtained so that there might be, if possible, consistent action in this administration and the next.

COMMISSIONERS ASK STATE FUNDS FOR USE IN COUNTY

Commissioner's office.

4. SALARIES OF PUBLIC OFFICIALS. We recommend a general decrease in the salaries of all public officials receiving salaries of over one thousand dollars ($1,000) per year, and specifically recommend a reduction of from 10 per cent to 25 per cent during the present emergency of all salaried officials of the county and State.

5. PENSIONS. We are opposed to the granting of any and all pensions to elected officials.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Governor's Tax Survey Commission, to each board of county commissioners throughout the State and to each Senator and member of the House of Delegates.

Greeted By Ritchie

"I do not know of any greater problem that the people have at this time than government and the cost of government," said Governor Ritchie in welcoming the assemblage. "People, as never before, are feeling the heavy hand of taxation, therefore, if you can reduce the expenses of your various counties you'll be doing big work. But it's a hard job. I'll be tremendously interested in the result of your conference and feel confident it will result in satisfactory achievements."

The meeting was called to order by Elmer E. Parkinson, president of the Board of County Commissioners of Anne Arundel county, at whose invitation the conferences was held. Before turning the gavel over to Senator Melvin, Mr. Parkinson sounded the keynote of the meeting in about a dozen words. "We are here because taxes must he reduced and this is the best way to find out how to go about it," he said.

"When the Boards of Commissioners throughout the State recognize the necessity of tax reduction it is a most helpful sign," Senator Melvin said. "This meeting is for the purpose of discovering ways and means to provide relief for the taxpayers who are now faced with the necessity of emergency action. We are here to tackle that emergency in a spirit of real determination and relief must be provided."

George Fox, County Superintendent of Education of Anne Arundel county, was called upon to outline the costs of schools and the effect a minimum school tax of 30 cents or 40 cents would have if the proposed reduction was put into effect. He explained that the school tax, now fixed by law at a minimum of 67 cents on each $100, must be levied by each county before it can share in the equalization fund.

Mr. Fox said, if fixed at 40 cents the equalization fund would cost the State approximately $2,624,00 more than under the present plan. Of this sum, $1,144,000 would be apportioned to Baltimore City, and $1,480,000 to the counties. If fixed at a minimum rate of 30 cents, he said it would cost the State $5,726,000 more, of which Baltimore City would get $2,203,000, and the counties $3,523,000. Under the existing plan, the State now raises about $7,000,000 for the school fund.

When Mr. Fox offered to answer any question that might be asked concerning the school question he reckoned without his hosts who soon made it necessary for him to leave the meeting and go to his office for data on which to base his replies.

Sensing the political dynamite with which the school question is charged, it looked for a short while as if the matter would be handled sort of gingerly, but when Herbert H. Balch, who presented the school resolution got warmed to his subject, the representatives of most of the other counties emulated his lead and denounced what was repeatedly declared to be a frankenstein which is reflecting the most dreadful retribution upon its creator.

"It's reached the point where the County Commissioners, the governing bodies of the counties, have been reduced to mere automatons," said Mr. Balch. "You've got to raise so much money for schools by direction of the law. I will not discuss the question of teaching colored girls the use of electrical appliances and such things while there are people in Talbot county who are renting their farms on leases which provide that if you'll pay the taxes and insurance take the farm.

"It has reached the point where many taxpayers are doing without necessities. I, personally, know nine or ten boys who graduated from high school with gold medals, yet they cannot enter college without spending two years in prep schools. We must cut down the overhead in the schools. I know it is difficult but that is why we are here. We have been made helpless by the artificial standard set up by the State. Isn't there some one here who can say how we can cut down overhead without juggling figures?"

Mr. Balch enumerated a number of "frills" which he said could be eliminated from the schools, and concluded by stating that his county found it necessary to build some roads to accommodate school busses which could not get through some of the dirt roads in winter. His remarks were greeted with much applause.

Former Senator J. H. C. Legg, of Queen Anne's county, whose remarks were received with laughter and applause, said in part: "As far as the Eastern Shore is concerned, the time has come when we've got to act. If we propose to cut salaries some will say 'why' you are against public education!' Landlords are worse off than their tenants. In my county, real estate is now a liability. It has reached the point where I feel it is the duty of every taxpayer to say what he really believes.

"We now levy $1.70 and could run the county on 80 cents if it was not for the schools. We felt that it was necessary to cut every salary but when we looked into the law, we found that the teachers salaries and other school expenses are fixed by statute. The tax rate has got to be reduced and there is no use in shifting the burden from the county to the State. There must be an actual reduction.

C. Ferdinand Sybert, counsel of the Howard county commissioners, voiced the sentiment of his board in no uncertain terms, as did Rex. A. Taylor, counsel to the Wicomico commissioners, G. Clinton McSherry, counsel to the Frederick county board, W. P. Wachtel, counsel to the Washington county board, and others.

Major Lee, who occupied a seat in the front row during the one-sided debate, asked for permission to address the gathering and the privilege was granted to him. After voicing his disagreement with any plan to alter the present method of providing salaries, and stating that as a taxpayer of Montgomery county he was in favor of maintaining the standard of the schools and that no one, in late years, had succeeded in amending the school laws. He spoke of conferences which have been held at which plans for raising money without additional taxes were discussed and said he favored a sales tax on some luxuries like cigarettes.

Mr. Lee said the State Roads commission is in complete sympathy with the county commissioners and is willing to help work out the problem, but not along the lines suggested in the resolution. He said the commission is willing to back legislation that will enable it to take over maintenance of some of the county roads, but they were against handing money over to the county boards which would hamper the State's plans and cut the State into 23 pieces, so far as the roads are concerned.

"As a means of working out the road problem, the State Roads commission favors the general system recently adopted by the States of North Carolina and Virginia," said Mr. Lee. "Under this plan, the road systems have become part of the State roads system. This is the logical and inevitable procedure. Already 3,644 miles of road in Maryland are part of the State system, leaving 11,166 miles in the various counties. That is, approximately, twenty-five percent of the total road mileage of the State of Maryland is now in the State system.

"Money expended within 25 miles of Baltimore City's limits is spent for the trade of Baltimore City and their motorists. The total amount so spent slightly exceeds Baltimore City's total contribution to all State taxes except the gasoline tax and nearly double the city's obvious percentage of contribution to the gas tax which produced the road money.

"Complete figures for the State fiscal year which ended December 31, 1930, show that 63.66 percent of all monies spent by the State Roads Commission were expended within 25 miles of the city limits of Baltimore. Baltimore City produced that year 63.11 percent of all State taxes except the gasolin tax. That year 38.03 percent of the motor vehicles were registered in Baltimore.

We propose to expend a considerable portion of the reconstruction fund in moving back all culverts to a more adequate width, and the early improvement of the lines of vision on all bad curves on State roads. The increased use of trucks makes it more pressingly necessary that the average motorists be freed from the risk of hazards on the immediate edge of the highway and be able to see around dangerous curves.

The State Roads Commission favors the maintenance of the county roads system with money produced by the State gasoline tax, and we feel that the present depression requires this additional charge on the State gas tax. The effort here today is to decrease the amount of money that will be raised by direct levy on the tax bills in each of the counties of Maryland. We are all for that."

After complimenting Mr. Lee on his apparent knowledge of the affairs of the State Roads Commission, Mr. Balch launched into a terse reply to what he called "a sophisticated argument." He said the Federal government spent four billions a year in such a way as to cause the people to rise up in protest. "Yet, any bureau-head will tell you and prove to you by argument, like my distinguished friend from Montgomery county, that such expenditures are necessary. There is nothing in our dispute as to the integrity and high ideals of the gentleman who has just addressed you, but the time has come when the people of the State must have relief and not resort to juggling figures. The operation was successful but the patient died will not do for an answer. When you go back to your people you want to be able to tell them whether or not we effected a reduction."

Mr. Lee again took the floor and reiterated his position as a citizen with reference to the schools, saying it was not a part of the governmental problem and that he adhered to a luxury tax rather than curtailment of the school system. "No one here seems to favor reducing expenditures for roads," he said.

Several attorneys, representing the various county boards joined in the debate and when at 2 o'clock, an effort was made to adjourn for lunch, which had been scheduled for 1:30, one of the Garrett county commmissioners, saying that the resolution was more important than lunch, blocked an attempt which was made to temporarily withdraw the resolution and the debate continued.

Mr. Lee said "Some of the larger counties, which have large bases, more registration of vehicles and more milcage, have never favored the Eastern Shore program and they don't want to scrap the State roads system." To which Mr. McSherry retorted that "it occurs to me that the problem is one for the counties to solve. Under the present conditions, the county commissioners are told by the State Board of Education what they shall do. Now it's proposed that the State Roads Commission shall tell the counties what they shall do. If the county commissioners propose to maintain their system, then they certainly cannot agree to Mr. Lee's proposal to turn over the expenditures of funds in their counties.

"It goes without saying that the County Commissioners in their counties know their problems better than the State Roads Commission. We approve of public education, but disapprove most heartily of any waste of money and favor a fair share of the taxes levied for gasoline."

At this stage of the proceedings Senator Melvin urged the commissioners defer action on the resolutions until some future day and suggested that a committee, consisting of one commissioner from each county be appointed to draft a resolution to be presented at another meeting.

Major Lee also urged that action be deferred and stated that no member of the State Roads Commission had been invited to attend the meeting, and that he just happened to walk in. He called attention to the fact that the Legislature does not meet until the first week in January and "I can't understand why you come here six weeks before the meeting of the Legislature and bang off this way on the first public occasion that these matters are discussed. I think this is a very important question and you are jumping too quick."

The call for the question was persistent and the vote taken shortly before three o'clock. Cecil and Prince George's counties passed without explanation. Commissioner Frank S. Given, of Baltimore county, which passed, stated that his board wanted more time to discuss the matter. Allegany passed because that county has a road board which builds the roads and the county commissioners have nothing to do with local road construction. All of the remaining counties voted for the resolution, except Montgomery, which voted against it.

Mr. McSherry, who presided at the after-luncheon meeting introduced Charles E. Grubb, of Montgomery county, president of the American Road Builders Association who talked on road construction methods in various States. Many of the commissioners left during Mr. Grubbe' speech and when the vote was taken on the school resolution, which was carried without a dissenting voice, not more than two-thirds of the commissioners were in the room. It was past five o'clock when the meeting adjourned.

NOT MUCH POMP AT THAT FIRST PILGRIM FEAST

ON EVERY Thanks giving with its hustle, happy family gatherings and subsequent chatterings, there comes a lull in the activities of the day. Conversation lags. Thoughts turn back to previous Thanksgivings.

Let us turn our thoughts back farther than our own experiences. Back indeed to the first Thanksgiving in America and there watch the preparation of this first feast, so different from our own. It will give us a close feeling of kinship with these predecessors of ours, these early American homemakers. And it will bring a deeper appreciation of the day, Helen Robertson writes, in the Detroit Free Press.

The picture of that first Thanksgiving feast celebrated in Plymouth on the thirteenth day of December, 1621, is a striking one. Imagine the blockhouse standing out stark and alone in the great wilderness. Its rough walls, crude furniture and huge fireplaces—the Thanksgiving table of long narrow boards, perhaps not more than three feet wide, supported at either end by trestles.

If this first Thanksgiving feast was served in dishes, they were made of square blocks of wood about ten to twelve inches square and three to four inches deep, hollowed down into a sort of bowl. Nor was there one of these trenchers, for so they were called, for each person. Usually two children or a man and wife ate from one trencher. Forks were almost unknown, in fact the first fork was introduced by Governor Winthrop in Boston twelve years later. There were spoons, however, and drinking cups and "noggins" which were a sort of mug with a handle. These were passed from hand to hand and lip to lip around the board.

No Holiday for Women.

The first Thanksgiving celebration lasted several days rather than just one. It was a time of recreation and games—for the men at least. One cannot imagine four women and the few young girls having much time for recreation when they must prepare the food for 121 men, 91 of whom were Indians with an unbounded capacity for gorging. And this for several days!

Doubtless the deer and great turkeys were roasted in the open, the remainder of the feast being cooked in huge pots and kettles of copper hanging from the "lug pole" in the center of the fireplace which occupied the greater part of one side of the room.

After this first Thanksgiving, many followed, several being celebrated in one year. We of today wonder at their courage to hold Thanksgiving feasts when there seems to have been so little to be thankful for.

In the mind of the Puritan, Christmas and its celebration was nothing short of idolatry. This was the day to be spent in religious service. But Thanksgiving was the day of family reunion and feasting.

Eighteenth Century Thanks.

The next Thanksgiving celebrations of which we read are those which required days and even weeks of preparation. We read the description of one table, which surely must have groaned under its weight of deliciousness.

"On one end of the table was the big roast turkey and on the other a goose and two pigeon pastries. There was abundance of vegetables." Besides these there were huge chines of roast pork and venison.

And still the same letter bemoans the fact that they were unable to have roast beef because of the scarcity due to the war! The letter finishes with this paragraph:

"Our mince pies were good, though we had to use dried cherries instead of raisins and venison instead of beef. The pumpkin pies, apple tarts, and big Indian puddings lacked for nothing save appetite by the time we got around to them." Do you wonder?

Setting Day Aside.

The celebration of a certain day for Thanksgiving was not universal until 1864 when President Lincoln issued a proclamation appointing the fourth Thursday in November with a view of having a day kept thereafter annually without interruption. The President's assassination the next year almost caused a suspension of his own rule until President Johnson appointed the last Thursday in November.

Nevertheless it is "ye oyster stewed," "turkie," corn and pumpkin which were served in the Pilgrim days that still play the leading roles in our Thanksgiving menus of today. And just as in those early years, it is still a day of family gatherings and feasting. So while the Thanksgiving celebrations conform with the dictates of our day there still remain shades and shadows of the past which enrich it and make it the happier.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

While additional light is constantly being thrown upon the authenticity of the Hold Scriptures by the discoveries of archaeologists, yet it is a startling fact that not a single original manuscript of the Sacred Book remains.

The oldest manuscripts in existence are the Codex Sinaiticus and Codex Vaticanus, both written about the 4th century A. D., and are manuscripts of the New Testament, written in Greek; the most ancient manuscripts of the Old Testament are scarcely a thousand years old.

Many causes may be assigned to account for this disparity, among them the following: As the Christians made but little use of he Hebrew Bible, the number of Hebrew manuscripts in existence from the third to the tenth century was not one-tenth, perhaps not one-twentieth of the number of the Greek manuscripts of the New Testament, consequently the probability of their destruction was proportionately greater than that of the New Testament manuscripts.

The Jews have been wanderers on the face of the earth for centuries, having no place of abode. This nomadic life has been unfavorable to the preservation of their sacred writings, while the convents of the Christians existing from the early centuries of the Church to the present, have been safe depositories for the Christian Scriptures. The convent has been the ark by which the manuscripts have been safely transmitted through the weltering floods of destruction which threatened them until they have come to rest on the Ararat of our more peaceful times.

Another cause was the destruction by the Jewish rabbis of those manuscripts which did not conform to the pointed Hebrew text after that had been established by the Masorites.

A custom that existed among the Jews of burying with distinguished teachers their worn manuscripts may account for a still further loss of many of their most valuable documents.

Without attempting any description of the most ancient and valuable of the Hebrew maunscripts, we shall name them in the order of importance indicated by scholars.

The best and most celebrated of all the codices of the Old Testament is that which takes its name from Rabbi Aaron ben-Mose ben-Asher, who lived at Tiberias in the 10th Century. It is regarded by rabbis as a model Codex of the Old Testament Scriptures. The manuscript is preserved at Beroea. Then there is the Codex of the Prophets, preserved at Cairo. A Codex of the Later Prophets, preserved in the British Museum, and a Codex of the Later Prophets preserved at Leipzig. Many manuscripts are preserved at Odessa. In this fine collection is one whole Bible, written about A. D. 1010.

A variety of readings is found in the Hebrew manuscripts, but there is a substantial agreement among them, as in the Synoptic Gospels.

SHOULD BE SURE RABBIT IS A HEALTHY SPECIMEN

State Health Department Warns Hunters of Rabbit Fever

"Frosty days, the hunting season and Bre'r Rabbit are all here together. Also, if you are a hunter or a food handler, the possibility of contracting rabbit fever from handling or skinning diseased rabbits. Therefore, when you handle Bre'r Rabbit in the field, in the market, of preparing the meat for rabbit pie, or rabbit stew, or rabbit a la Maryland, or for any other use, be sure you are tackling a good healthy specimen, not a diseased one," Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the State Department of Health, cautions hunters, sportsmen, food handlers and housewives.

"Rabbit fever, or hularemia, to give the disease its medical name," he continued, "is an infectious disease to which rabbits and other small animals are susceptible, and which spreads from animal to animal thru the bite of infeced ticks. Human beings contract it either in handling infected animals, through the bite of infected ticks or in crushing infected ticks.

"The presence of the disease is readily recognized in animals that are being skinned, or prepared for sale, or for cooking, by a characteristic speckled appearance of the liver and spleen which are dotted with white or yellowish spots. Human beings usually pick up the infection through a scratch or break in the skin of the hands or arms. There have been some cases in which the disease has been contracted through rubbing the face or eyes with the hands after they have touched the infected material. The use of rubber gloves or of gloves of some other impervious material is accordingly advised in skinning rabbits or in preparing the meat for the table.

"A disease that corresponds closely to what we now call rabbit fever has been known to market people for a long time, but it is only recently that the source of the disease was discovered. The disease often starts with a severe chill and at first may be taken for an attack of grippe. It is usually characterized by a typhoid-like fever of several weeks duration and is accompanied by great prostration, with long, slow convalescence. In many cases, an ulcer develops at the site of the infection.

"The disease requires careful medical attention and the family physician should be called promptly for those who develop symptoms that suggest rabbit fever. The doctor's diagnosis may be confirmed by blood tests and the laboratory of the State Department of Health will make the necessary tests at the request of the attending physician or the County Health Officer.

"Rabbit fever was made reportable in Maryland in 1928. Since then 80 cases have been reported to the State Department of Health—36 in Baltimore City and 44 in the counties. There have ben seven deaths.

"Tularemia occurs principally in wild rabbits. It has not been found in rabbits raised in rabbitries. Thorough cooking of the meat destroys the germ. Thoroughly cooked rabbit is accordingly harmless."

The Queen Who Gave To Maryland Its Name.

HENRIETTA MARIA, THE GODMOTHER OF CALVERT'S COLONY

by
ALFRED D. CHARLES
In the Baltimore Sunday Sun, November 20, 1932.

As Maryland prepares to observe with fitting ceremonies the three-hundredth anniversary of the signing of the provincial charter, attention naturally turns to the State's godmother, the queen for whom the colony was named. Though the name Henrietta Maria probably is not familiar to many persons today, when the charter was signed in 1632 she was Queen of England, sharing in the unhappy reign of Charles I. It was his affection for her which caused the King to write the name, Terra Mariae, in the charter he signed for George Calvert, Lord Baltimore.

Calvert had wanted to call his colony Crescentia, meaning land of growth or increase, but in order to please Charles he left blank the space for the name when he took his charter to the King for his signature. The charter was approved, but when the matter of a name was brought up, Calvert apparently approached his own choice cautiously with the remark that he was sorry the new land could not be named after his Highness, since Charles' name already had been perpetuated by the colony of Carolina.

Then the King had an idea which doomed Crescentia. Why not name the province in honor of his Queen? Mariana was suggested, but a writer by that name had once penned a tract against monarshy so that suggestion was discarded. Finally the King decided upon Maryland, writing the Latin form of the name into the charter. Thus the State was granted to an Irish lord by a Scott who was King of England, and the tract was named in honor of a French Princess who was the namesake of her Italian mother.

Henrietta, history has revealed, was a much better woman than a queen. From her first official act, that of sprinkling holy water on her murdered father's body when a babe in arms, to her death at the age of 60 from an overdose of sleeping powder, her life was replete with change, and so unhappy that she called herself "la reine malheureuse."

As the inscription on the silver urn containing her heart stated, she was "Queen of England, France, Scotland, and Ireland; daughter to the French King Henry IV the Victorious; wife of Charles I the Martyr, and mother to the restored King Charles II." She was also mother to James II and was grandmother to three monarchs of Great Britain, to a queen of Spain, a duchess of Savoy, and a dauphiness of France.

When she married Charles I she was the first daughter of France to be queen consort to England in two centuries. She was the first queen of England to refuse to be crowned, and later she refused to accompany the king to the coronation in Scotland. Known as Henrietta to intimates, she was called Queen Mary by her English subjects mainly because the British disliked her French-sounding name.

She remained a Catholic despite her Protestant husband and Puritan subjects, and this religious difference contributed to the unhappiness of the first few years of her life in England. She never mastered the English language, either, much to the disgust of the country gentlemen who eventually took the throne away from her husband. But this inability to speak English fluently did not prevent her from gossiping, and on several occasions her untimely telling of state secrets proved embarrassing for both herself and the King. She is credited with the first naming the Roundheads, a political party that opposed the Cavaliers in the civil wars which put Oliver Cromwell in control as protector. This name was given widespread recognition after Henrietta had seen a young man on the street with his head shaved in contrast to the long hair and curls of the Cavaliers.

"La, what a handsome roundhead," the queen remarked, and the name stuck.

Vain to an irritating degree, she caused the civil war to be prolonged because she was winning an occasional fight and was gaining for herself the formidable title of "she-majesty generalissima." But difficult positions and circumstances could always be avoided by pleading ill health and fleeing to her favorite spa in France.

Her confessor has said of Henrietta that her only sin was that of omission. If Henrietta was unfaithful to Charles, the facts are not well enough established to come down to us as history. But the nimble pen of Samuel Pepsy, famous for his revealing diary, jots down the gossip of the day concerning the queen and her adviser, Henry Jermyn, the Earl of St. Albans. The latter was in the queen's company and household for many years, and after Charles' death, it was rumored that Jermyn and Henrietta were married. Pepys, in summing up the year 1661, writes:

> The queen-mother is said to keep too great a court now; and her being married to my lord St. Alban's is commonly talked of, and that they had a daughter between them in France, how true, God knows.

This was the woman whose portrait hangs in the Executive Chambers in the Maryland State House, her dark eyes piercing, her small body held erect in a royal gown bedecked with jewels, with her somewhat large and unattractive mouth formed into a half smile.

Henrietta, whose three hundred and twenty-third birthday falls on November 25, was brought up to pursue the lighter side of court life. She inherited from her Italian Medeci ancestors a taste for painting, the arts and music; and she became an exquisite ballet dancer and lover of masques, rather than a woman trained to share the throne of England. In her girlhood all her talents were directed toward being a leader of society in the French court, instead of wife to a king struggling for his crown. Her voice, naturally sweet and powerful, was better suited for prima donna roles than telling state secrets.

Soon after their marriage, Charles and Henrietta began quarrels over religion and French customs, and these arguments lasted for several years. There was a controversy, for example, over who should say grace at the table—the king's chaplain or the queen's confessor.

While they were in the midst of their disagreements Charles was scheduled to be crowned. He forgot his part of the argument while he tried to persuade Henrietta to be crowned with him; he flattered her, threatened her, and pleaded with her, but to no avail. The queen took her religious training more seriously than had her Protestant father, Henry IV, who held that Paris was "well worth one mass" and joined the Roman Catholic church forthwith.

One of the principal sources of their disagreement was the presence of Henrietta's French attendents. They irked the English, but the queen was firm that they remain and for a while Charles put up with them for lack of a way to send them home. After a year of discomfort, however, the king ordered the French attendants to leave. The protest raised by the departing ladies was feeble compared with Henrietta's laments. According to tradition, she went into one of her best fits of temper, and finding the windows of her room locked, smashed them to pieces in order to wave farewell. Charles had to drag her from the casement and force her to be quiet until the French were out of sight.

A year later the four hundred she had brought from Paris were replaced by two dozen, and Henrietta partially forgave her husband. After two stormy years. Charles and Henrietta forgot their quarrels and when the queen made it known that she would present England with an addition to the Stuart line, the king wholly dismissed their past differences.

But the son born May 13, 1629, and named Charles James, died a short while later. Before she was 35, Henrietta had given birth to nine royal children, four boys and five girls. A son and a daughter died the day of their birth, and two other daughters died in childhood. Her favorite daughter, Henrietta Anne, the youngest of the family, lived to be 26, while Charles II reached the age of 56 and James II, 68. Henry, her youngest son, died when 20 years old. Of her nine children, she was survived only by her namesake and her two sons who became kings.

With all her power over her husband, which was becoming more marked as the years went by, Henrietta could not control two things—her temper when she became displeased, and her tongue when she had a secret or wished to speak English. Her temper reached the pitch of rage on many occasions and even trivial things would cause her to become aroused.

She found the English language as difficult to manage as her temper. She was a miserable speller, her grammar was even worse and her conversations were pieced together with French. Once, in order to give her practice in speaking the language she was induced to take part in a masque to be given on the king's birthday. For the occasion Walter Montague wrote a piece called the Shepherd's Pastoral, which took eight hours to enact. It so happened that about this time Prynne wrote his famous attack on women acting on the stage, and because the queen had taken part in a play, she voiced her disapproval. Although the masque had been a private one, given only for a few friends, Charles became furious and ordered the author's ears cut off.

As long as Henrietta was performing the duties of wife to Charles, she fared quite well, for as a husband the monarch was extremely happy. But when the queen started to dabble in politics, she was less fortunate, and may well be regarded as one of the causes for the loss of her husband's head.

Lack of money and expensive wars had forced Charles to call Parliament after a period of eleven years in which he ruled alone. But when this Parliament, known as the Short Parliament, instead of giving Charles his money, began to recite the needs of the country, the king flared up and dissolved it. But a second attempt to invade Scotland, in what was called the Second Bishop's War, failed more miserably than the first, and Charles had to call another governing body in November, 1640. This group, known as the Long Parliament, had Charles at its mercy. He was forced to accept drastic changes in the laws, and his power was reduced greatly by the country gentlemen who made Parliament.

This opposition alarmed the king and he tried at the first opportunity to stem the advancing tide by arresting the ring leaders of the rebellion. On January 4, 1642, Charles marched at the head of his guard to Westminster Hall, the meeting place of Parliament, and entering the House of Commons, attempted to seize the five leaders, Pym, Hampden, Hazelridd, Hollies, and Stroder, in order to bring them to trial on the charge of treason.

Charles made one serious mistake in planning his entry to the Commons—he told Henrietta about it. Over sixteen years of married life had evidently not taught him that the queen had great difficulty in keeping a secret. For Charles in his usual blundering manner embraced his wife as he left, saying, "If you find one hour elapse without hearing ill news from me, you will see me, when I return, the master of my kingdom."

The next sixty minutes seemed eternity to Henrietta and, not hearing anything from the king after they had gone by, she could not restrain herself longer. Off she flew to Lady Carlisle, telling her fair companion everything. The listener, unfortunately, happened to be a relative and a spy of one of the members. She immediately sent word to the Commons and her message reached there before the king's arrival. Charles carried out his planned entry, but forewarned, the intended victims had fled and the king was balked.

When Henrietta learned what her tattling had done, she begged her husband for forgiveness, which was granted as usual. But London rose clamorously to express its indignation over the attempt to intimidate Parliament and, fearful of their safety, the king and the royal family withdrew into the country.

This break with Parliament meant civil war. On August 22, 1642, Charles unfurled the royal banner at Nottingham, and bade all loyal Englishmen to rally to their king. The Parliament in its turn gathered an army and prepared to take the field. Henrietta, whose weakness had caused the failure of the king's attempt to thwart rebellion before it started, used her charm to bring into the slack royal purse enough money to muster soldiers to battle the roundheads. Frightened at the way the Puritans were acting, the Queen had left the shores of England early in February, 1642, taking with her the royal jewels. Though the Dutch burgomasters were little impressed by her title of Queen of England, her jewels won for her the necessary funds, and she departed for England with approximately 2,000,000 pounds sterling.

On the voyage from Scheveling to the chalk cliffe of her adopted country, the royal convoy ran into one of the storms which whip the North Sea into a froth. There was great concern over the safety of the ship Princess Royal and the ladies in Henrietta's party wept and wailed in their staterooms. Only the Queen was calm and finally some one asked her how she could remain composed when the ship might at any moment plunge to the bottom. Henrietta replied gaily, "Comfort yourselves, mes cheres; queens of England are never drowned." The ship, however, was not as staunch as the Queen, and the vessel was put back into harbor to await better weather.

The second attempt to cross the channel met more favorable weather, but the convoy was attacked this time by five Parliament ships under Commodore Batten. The royal party took refuge on shore, but the next morning the enemy ships commenced a cannonade on the house in which the Queen was sleeping. Henrietta fled with the other members of her party, but in her flight she remembered that her dog, Mitte, had been left behind at the mercy of Batten's bombardment. The Queen ran back into the house, rescued little Mitte and carried the pet to safety in a nearby ditch. Even the ditch was not entirely safe, but the royal party escaped injury and at ebb tide the attacking ships were forced to withdraw out of range.

Setting up her headquarters in Burlington, the Queen went about gathering for herself an army. She distributed arms among the York men and finally had 2,000 under her command. While she was adding to her army, Charles and Parliament were negotiating for peace, but Henrietta would have none of that. She warned Charles not to make peace; she liked her new duties too much to see her army disbanded. It was at about this time that she solemnly advised a group of ladies who had come to pay their respect to "learn by my example to obey your husbands."

It was not the Roundheads who ended Henrietta's career as generalissimo, but the arrival of a daughter. The King and Queen parted for the last time in April, 1644, Charles to surrender to the Scotts (who later sold him to his enemies) and Henrietta to leave for France.

When she stepped on native soil all her former glory was gone. She was no longer queen, and what was worse, no longer young and attractive. While Charles was hanging to his life by a bare thread, and losing it at length, Henrietta was in poverty in France, until a grant was given her out of respect for her father.

She returned to England after the restoration of her son, Charles II, but only because the English would not grant her money to be spent in France. She tried in vain to influence the English court of Charles. She was too old to fit into the new life which the Restoration set up, and had no following to encourage her. Samuel Pepys paid sixpence to a sculler to row him to the royal barge upon her arrival in England, and observes in his diary, "there were but three bonfires in the city to welcome her, and it was believed her coming did not please anyone."

Though the London fogs were destroying her health, Henrietta remained in England until 1665, when her chest became so affected that she was forced to leave for France. On August 31, 1669, she was given opium to aid her in going to sleep, but the dose was so great that Henrietta never awoke.

Her passing did not particularly affect anyone in the English court, for most of her former friends were gone. Her enemies, however, could not conceal their feelings, and one of her most bitter opponents, Lieut.-Gen. Edmund Ludlow, wrote in his memoirs:

> About this time Henrietta Maria, queen-mother of England and aunt of the present King of France, having been formerly an active instrument in contriving and fomenting the long and bloody civil war in England, and encouraging the barbarious massacre of the Protestants in Ireland; and more lately from a spirit of revenge and malice a principle adviser of the cruelties acted in England, died at Paris. Her distemper at first seemed not to be dangerous, but upon taking something prescribed by the physicians to procure sleep, the potion operated in such a manner that she waked no more. She received threescore thousand pounds yearly from England, and yet left many and great debts unpaid. She was our particular enemy and had constantly favored the designs that had been carried on against our lives.

With all her faults, the people of Maryland have Henrietta to thank for one thing: She made it possible to sing Maryland, my Maryland, instead of attempting a chorus of Crescentia, my Crescentia.

GIVING THANKS IN DARK DAYS OF REVOLUTION

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S Thanksgiving day proclamation at Valley Forge took great pains to put before the soldiers "the tremendous reason for this most special acknowledgment of the divine goodness." We of today, looking back with a full knowledge of the great trials and sufferings placed upon the Continental army in that winter of misery at Valley Forge, may perhaps wonder at the faith thus unfolded. There is, however, one fact which we, accustomed to observe the last Thursday of November as Thanksgiving day, should not overlook. It is thanksgiving day as we know it, with a definite place upon our calendar, did not come into existence until 1863.

Thanksgiving day originated with the Pilgrims, who set aside a day for thanksgiving at Plymouth immediately after their first harvest, in 1621. The Massachusetts Bay colony first observed such a day in 1630 and frequently thereafter until 1680, when it became an annual festival in that colony. Connecticut also had a similar festival annually from 1647 onward. Usually these days for thanksgiving followed the harvest, and were set aside primarily to give thanks to the Lord for the blessings he had bestowed upon the Colonists. During the Revolution, the Continental congress appointed one or more days for thanksgiving each year, except in 1777, when not even a congressman could find any blessings to point out to his constituents as reason for rejoicing. These Revolutionary Thanksgiving days usually were founded upon some military success and fortune smiled warmly, indeed, upon the Continental army in 1777—the winter of despair at Valley Forge.

Valley Forge Observation.

Washington's Thanksgiving day proclamation at Valley Forge came after the snows and the hunger and the sufferings of that terrible winter of 1777-78 had departed and spring smiled again upon the fertile valleys of Pennsylvania. The occasion was the entrance of France into the war as an ally of the Colonies. The Valley Forge Thanksgiving May, 1778, was a military celebration, with the chaplain of brigade directed "to offer up thanks and deliver a discourse suitable to the occasion." Then there was cannon fire and huzzas, and cries of "Long Live the King of France!" "Long Live the Friendly European Powers!" and finally a general running fire and the huzza, "The American States!"

Celebrations of Peace.

Another special Thanksgiving day was ordered by General Washington at Newburgh on the Hudson, April 19, 1783, eight years to the day from the shot fired at Lexington. Ultimate peace had been assured ever since the surrender of Cornwallis, but the question had become alarmingly acute ever since: How was it possible to keep even a remnant of the army alive to receive the treaty of peace? Six months more of this starvation, this utter discouragement as to the use of it all—the harassed general dared not think of what his poor boys might be driven to do to end it all.

The joy with which the information was at last received from Sir Guy Carleton that a cessation of hostilities was announced can scarcely be imagined. Immediately, the commander in chief issued his proclamation and directed that a public religious service and thanksgiving should take place on the same evening, April 19. This was probably the happiest Thanksgiving America has ever experienced, writes Estelle Harris in the Bicentennial News, published by the Alexandria, Va., Gazette in co-operation with the United States commission for the celebration of the two-hundredth anniversary of Washington's birth. A country gained glory and honor, and home around the bend of the road. December 11, 1783, the gloriously solemn day appointed by congress, Dr. John Rogers preached his famous sermon, announcing . . . "We have taken our place among the nations and empires of the earth."

Presidential Proclamation.

The first Presidential Thanksgiving proclamation named November 26, 1789. As far as the people were concerned, they could join in with any and all services, for they felt the nation was saved again now that the great Washington was at the helm. As for Father George himself, he was entirely too busy to write much in that diary of his, that is such a precious legacy to his people. Here is all he says: "November 26. Being the day appointed for a Thanksgiving, I went to St. Paul's chapel, though it was most inclement and stormy—but few people at church." The signing of the confederation articles was the especial occasion.

Quelling the insurrection in Pennsylvania was again a deliverance from danger, and cause for great rejoicing on the part of all the people, and a proclamation was made, appointing a day of thanksgiving, for the general welfare and stable condition of the Union. This was issued from Independence hall, and February 19, 1795, was thus set apart, on which day the nation was "with devout reverence and affectionate gratitude, to return thanks for its national blessings and implore their continuance." As with all of George Washington's papers, this proclamation abounds in patriotism and counsel of the highest order, both as worthy of emulation today as yesterday.

Much Reason for Thanks.

In looking back to these special Thanksgiving days of early American history, no patriotic heart can help feeling the beauty and appropriateness of these gatherings. Also, the part they played in keeping the little nation as one ideal family, until it could walk alone, the American fathers holding before it the truths on which the foundation rests, liberty, equality, integrity. For whatever else has or has not happened, the foundation of this nation still rests securely and there is much to be thankful for on Thanksgiving day. The stars have not faltered in their course and freedom still reigns. The good earth has blossomed and fruited for her overlord, man, as in 1607 and 1776, and now that autumn has marked the finish of her harvest for this year, old earth is drawing back her sap, her chlorophyl and her chemicals into her storeroom, to be covered with snowy blankets instead of green grass—conserving and renewing all her power making ready for next summer's spread of glory.

SAND! SAND! SAND!

For Building Purposes and Construction Work

Third Street. Oakland, Md.

C. H. BROWNING,

MT. LAKE PARK

It is reported in the public press that in Baltimore there are more than 15,000 families receiving aid from the welfare association in that city, as compared with 4,500 last winter. What is true of Baltimore is correspondingly true of other large centers of population. It is no doubt true that for the great majority this is a lean year. Many who have not heretofore known the pinch of economic stress are hard put to find the bare necessities of life—food, clothing, warmth, and comfort for their loved ones. Fear for the immediate future, and in many cases despair, are ghosts that stalk the footsteps of more than eleven million people in this country. On Thanksgiving Day, ham hock and cabbage will take the place of turkey and cranberries on many tables heretofore laden with appetizing foods. But for all that, those whose homes have not been sold for taxes or foreclosed under a mortgage and who have a shelter from the icy blasts of winter, should be thankful that the great agencies organized for relief, National, state, municipal and private, have made it possible that no one need suffer for the lack of food, heat or clothing. Aid which may be asked for and received, under present circumstances, is not to be considered as charity, but an effort on the part of the combined resources of the United States to relieve distress occasioned by the most stupendous economic world-wide crisis in history. We should be thankful that this government stands on a rock-ribbed foundation, and that notwithstanding the billions of dollars loaned to foreign powers(and which will probably never be repaid) it is far from being broke. We will emerge triumphant, with the mistakes of business and governmental policies corrected and with truth, justice and confidence ruling nations and individuals where greed, avarice and might have been enthroned.

The arrest and conviction of a party accused of killing squirrels within the corporate limits of the Park will certainly impress all that the authorities will use every legal effort to enforce the ordinances and laws of the town. It is probably true that, as was contended, the accused did not know, when the squirrel was shot, that he was within the corporate limits. We have no reason to doubt his word. However, while the boundaries are not marked, yet it is better to be certain when hunting that we are well beyond the prescribed area. Wild life is a valuable asset to the Park as long as it depends on visitors from towns and cities for its prosperity, and it should be protected.

The Mayor and Town Council have adopted a budget for the current year and the Town Clerk has worked out a simple and efficient set-up on the books. It appears that ample provisions have been made for contemplated expenditures. The benefits, we believe, will be apparent at the end of the year.

Mr. Harold Bell, Cumberland, was a visitor at the home of his mother, Mrs. Alma Bell, this week.

Mrs. Charles P. Martin is seriously ill at her home in Loch Lynn, but at this writing (Tuesday) is somewhat improved.

Mrs. Arthur Humbertson and little daughter, of Richmond, Va., is the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. V. Harvey.

Mr. John Ream, of Harvey & Ream store, is somewhat incapacitated because of a bruised arm.

Mrs. Frank Murphy, who has been in Fairmont for some days, returned here Saturday.

Mr. Charles A. Oswell is in Washington, D. C., on a business trip.

Mr. Jack Craig motored to points in Pennsylvania Tuesday for a stay of some time.

Through the efforts of Mrs. Wilson Camden and Miss Myrtle Finnell the sum of $80.50 was subscribed and turned over to the Oakland Volunteer Fire Department as a slight acknowledgement of the efficient services rendered.

Man and Wife of Bloomington Cited To Appear for Liquor Law Violation

Federal Investigator William R. Harvey, accompanied by two "undercover" agents, staged four raids last Friday night on search warrants and cited three men and two women to appear for hearings on charges of violating the prohibition laws.

Only one raid was made in Garrett county when Charles "Ducky" Wolfe, Bloomington, and his wife, Nannie Wolfe, were charged with sale and possession. They were cited to appear before Magistrate W. A. Gonder, of Oakland.

Officers reported seizure of 22 gallons of alleged whiskey.

SONG OF THE THRIFTY FARMER

Mirandy says she's got a plan
To feed us all from out a can
This winter: we'll have plenty feed
And vitamins for every need.

She says if we are short of cash
Instead of feeding us on hash,
She'll go down cellar like she's planned
And feed us from the stuff she's canned.

The garden's full of everything:
Instead of wastin' it, by jing,
She puts it all up in its juice
And saves it for our future use.

The cellar's full of corn and beans,
And cauliflower and turnip greens—
Tomatoes, too, and beets and chard:
I sure won't find it very hard

When snow is blowin' round outside
To stow the stuff away inside
My belt; and then we'll sure live high,
Nor have very much to buy.

The squirrels don't know what hard times is:
They store away the nuts; gee whiz—
They don't depend on anyone
To feed them when the summer's done.

When wind and winter take their toll
They curl up down there in their hole,
Nor worry 'bout a note that's due,
Nor if their creditors will sue.

Hard times don't worry parent squirrels
Nor any of their boys or girls;
They help themselves when weather's good
And when it's bad they've got their food

All stored away—thev ain't misled
By thinkin' they will be fed
From some emergency relief—
No, sir; it is the squirrels' belief
That God helps them who helps themselves.
And so they fill their pantry shelves.

If we would follow that there plan
And raise a lot of stuff and can
Our troubles would be over soon
And we'd have lots to eat each moon.

Thanksgiving Then and Now

Styles and customs come and go but no one thinks of changing the customary Thanksgiving dinner. The main dishes of the meal were established by the colonists in Massachusetts in 1621 and are still used today. The following is an example of the All-American menu:

Oyster Stew
Roast Turkey — Chestnut Dressing
Giblet Gravy — Cranberry Sauce
Mashed Potatoes — Boiled Onions
Stewed Dried Corn — Mashed Turnips
Celery — Corn Bread
Waldorf Salad — Pumpkin Pie
Coffee
Nuts — Fruit

To obtain a glossy brown surface on the turkey, rub it well with corn oil before baking. This does not affect the flavor. Flour drizzled over the oiled surface will make a thick, crisp brown crust less glossy than using just oil.

The pumpkin may be canned or fresh baken and put through a sieve. A fluffy texture is obtained by whipping the egg whites to a stiff froth and folding them into the mixture at the last.

If a glossy surface is desired, dribble 2 or 3 tablespoons of rich milk over the top of the pie before baking.

In Plymouth, Massachusetts, for the Forefather's Day dinner, a few kernels of parched corn are placed at each cover In remembrance of the importance of corn in the development of our country.

The first recorded sale of canned corn was made to S. S. Pierce, Boston, Mass. The invoice, dated Feb. 19, 1848, was for "one dozen canisters of preserved corn at $4."

Baked Cheese Omelet

Three cups milk, 1 tablespoon salt, 2 eggs, ¼ lb. cheese, ½ cup cornmeal.

Scald milk in double boiler, add salt and cornmeal. Stir until thick; cook for 20 minutes; add cheese cut in fine pieces and stir until melted. Add the beaten egg yolks. Fold in beaten whites. Pour into greased baking dish in moderate oven until firm, about 20 minutes.

Kidney Bean Roast

One and one-half cups kidney beans, 1 cup grated cheese, 1 cup bread crumbs, 1 tablespoon salt, 2 tablespoons chopped onions, ½ cup of milk.

Soak beans 24 hours, cook until very tender in the same water, add the salt, drain, chop, add onion, cheese, crumbs and enough milk to moisten. Form into loaf. Bake in a moderate oven for 40 minutes. Baste with water in which beans were cooked.

Graham Pudding

Three cups milk, 2 tablespoons of tapioca, 6 tablespoons sugar, ¼ teaspoon salt, 10 graham crackers, 1 egg.

Scald the milk in a two-quart double boiler. Add the tapioca, sugar, salt, and the graham crackers, crumbled. Cook for 15 minutes, stirring frequently. Remove from fire and pour over the slightly beaten egg yolk and then mix thoroughly. Pour into a buttered baking dish and bake one-half hour in a moderate oven. Make a meringue by beating the egg white until it is stiff enough to hold its shape. Add two teaspoons sugar, cover the pudding with the meringue and place it in the oven to brown.

FATHER KILLED; SON HURT AS AUTO LEAVES HIGHWAY

Car Traveling at High Speed Demolished at it Crashes into Tree Near Finzel at State Line

John H. Rembold, aged 67 years, Route No. 4, Meyersdale, Pa., was killed and his son Roy Rembold, also of Meyersdale, was seriously injured when their automobile left the highway near the State line above Finzel, Garrett county, Saturday evening at 5:30 o'clock.

According to State Police Officer George J. Miller, who with State Officer B. J. Nolan, investigated the accident, the car had been running at a high rate of speed and when it rounded a curve, Roy Rembold, who was driving, apparently lost control. The car, which was practically demolished, took the curve wide, left the road and crashed into a tree. The men were returning to their home from Pittsburgh

Passing motorists took the two men to Miners' Hospital, Frostburg, where the senior Rembold was pronounced dead. His son is in a critical condition and is suffering from possible internal injuries, a crushed hip and severe lacerations about his head, face and body.

The body of John H. Rembold was removed to Meyersdale.

Corporal Thomas Currie, of the State Police, Walter W. Dawson, the State's Attorney for Garrett county, and W. A. Gonder, coroner, investigated the accident for the State of Maryland on Sunday morning, but found that the accident had taken place twelve feet beyond the Maryland line in the State of Pennsylvania.

The senior Rembold was a son of Joseph Rembold, 90 years old, residing near Eglon, and well known in Oakland. He was also a brother-in-law of Congressman Samuel A. Kendall, of Meyrsdale, Pa.

KITZMILLER BOOTERS ARE DEFEATED BY BRUCE HIGH

Seven Field Goals and One Penalty Kick Scored by Allegany

Kitzmiler high school's soccer team after winning the Garrett county championship, was outclassed at Lonaconing on Tuesday afternoon when they were defeated by Bruce high of Westernport in the first elimination games for the State championship. Bruce high scored 15 points against the Garrett county aggregation and was the 12th win in a row for an Allegany county soccer team, and the sixth time that Kitzmiller has been eliminated in the opening contest.

The Westernport goalkeeper handled only three chances at the uprights during the sixty minute contest. In the initial half the Westernport eleven succeeded in making four field goals to lead 8 to 0. Three more goals and one penalty kick were registered in the last half.

Kitzmiller players included Sowers, Rittr, Vauken, Vodopivec, Maly, Strah, Walakus, Gough, Mosser, Craver and Strachan. McIntyre substituted for Sowers, and Joe Ervin, of the Playground Athletic League of Baltimore, refereed the contest.

Bruce High's next game in the State tourney is scheduled for Wednesday, December 7.

Central High school's fieldball team of Lonaconing, trimmed Hagerstown in the opening round on Tuesday and will probably be matched with Friendsville, Garrett county's winner, in the second elimination contest for the Western Maryland championship.

Truck Wrecks on Caddell Mountain

A truck load of merchandise on its way to Morgantown from Baltimore, was wrecked near the foot of Caddell Mountain, west of Terra Alta, on Saturday morning, when it got beyond control.

The driver ditched the large van while it was making fast speed in order to stop it. The truck was completely wrecked, strewing all kinds of merchandise for hundreds of feet along the highway.

John W. Wilgar, 34, Baltimore, one of the occupants, was slightly injured and taken to a Morgantown hospital but he was discharged Sunday night and returned with two other men to Baltimore.

The goods belonged to Montgomery Ward and Company, and were taken to Kingwood and stored.

OLD SANTA

GIFTS—Santa Claus in mufti is Raymond A. Sinskey, Baltimore philanthropist, who will give 50,000 pairs of shoes and stockings to school children of Baltimore and Maryland counties, beginning today. He gives holiday baskets by thousands to the needy.

ONLY TWENTY-ONE DAYS TO SHOP FOR CHRISTMAS

Stores Being Stocked with Goods and Decorated for Holidays

With but twenty-one shopping days remaining until Christmas citizens of Garrett county have already begun their holiday buying and local merchants are optimistic of a fairly good business between now and midnight, December 24.

Most of the stores have received their Christmas merchandise and are displaying it prominently. A few windows are already decorated and others will be trimmed within a few days, giving the towns of the county a holiday atmosphere. Oakland streets will probably be lighted again this year with curb Christmas trees.

Practically everything in Christmas goods may be purchased in Oakland this year. Several stores will have a large line of toys and novelties and other Christmas items.

It was stated that more useful presents have been given during the past few years and that it was expected this custom would prevail this Christmas, on account of the fact that people are being more careful with their money than has been the case for a number of years past.

Maple Sugar Producers Discuss Plans for 1933 Season

The annual meeting of the Garrett County Maple Products Association was held Tuesday afternoon at the County Agent's office, when G. Emerson Bishoff was elected president; O. C. Buckle, vice-president, and Mrs. Mason Glotfelty was reelected secretary and treasurer.

Harrison Yommer, Salisbury, Pa., and Warren Harvey, Gormania, W. Va., both Maryland men, were added to the board of directors.

The plan of work for 1933 was discussed. It was decided to continue the inspection of syrup to establish grades and a market. The product will be distributed this year in glass containers, from one pint to one gallon in size.

A drive for new members is being made until February 1, during which time the annual dues will he $1.50. After February 1 the dues will revert to the regular fee of $2.

The organization has received certificate of registration of the trade mark with the U. S. Bureau of Patents, "Crest O' the Alleghanies," and all syrup of the association will be sold under that name.

It was planned to send an exhibit of the product to the Farm Bureau meeting in Baltimore in January.

Explosion In Range

The local Volunteer Fire Department was called about 11:15 o'clock on Tuesday evening to extinguish a blaze at the home of Mrs. G. W. L. Lohm, Alder street, occasioned when the oven of the kitchen range exploded as the result of an accumulation of gas therein. Little damage resulted.

DISTRIBUTION OF SHOES IN STATE STARTS TODAY

Five Hundred Pairs to be Sent Here by Baltimore Philanthropist

Rich man, poor man, beggar man and ex-thief form one of the strongest big parades to be found in Baltimore, or elsewhere these days. They meet daily in a small office at 213 East Fayette Street.

In the office sits Santa Claus in mufti dispensing half his private income to anyone who can prove a just claim upon charity. The claims allowed are counted in thousands.

Shoes For Children

The donor, Raymond A. Sinskey, has been known to the general public almost entirely through his donation of 14,000 pairs of shoes and stockings to school children last Christmas and his recent announcement of a gift of 50,000 pairs this year. Distribution is to start today, half going to children in Baltimore and half being divided between youngsters living in the Maryland counties. Garrett county is to receive 500 pairs.

This generosity, however, is but one of many, many gifts, correspondence regarding which fills substantial filing cabinets with letters from all sort and conditions of men. Since February Sinskey has given away 500 baskets of food each week, while 1,000 baskets were given away by him last Christmas and an equal number January 15.

Sinskey's Jewish affiliations do not in any degree limit the object of his aid, which is often as not given through Catholic and Protestant churches or non-sectarian agencies. Institutions, including one of the oldest private schools for girls in Maryland, as well as individuals have been largely aided by him.

The generous nature of this Baltimorean is at least partly inherited from his mother, who many years ago endowed a home for orphans in East Baltimore. His own story is unique.

Sleeps On Bench

Ten years ago, after graduation from the University of Maryland, and following a brief but highly profitable experience in Wall Street, Sinskey's resources were suddenly wiped out and after vacating his room he checked his possessions at the railroad station and walked the streets.

One night he spent partly on a New York park bench, from which he was twice ordered off by a policeman, and partly on the steps of the subway. The next morning, he said:

"Walking up Fifth avenue I decided I had rather sacrifice my pride than my honor and sent a collect telegram asking for enough money to take me home to Baltimore."

Resolve Of Life Time

"I had nothing to eat until the answer came.

"On the way back I made up my mind if I ever made money, I would devote myself to philanthropy and give half of it away, which is what I am doing now."

Three Injured in Car Wreck Near Kitzmiller Saturday

Three persons were injured Saturday afternoon when a car occupied by William Price and Glen Beals, Kitzmiller, collided with a car driven by Willard Gibson, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Z. Gibson, of Mt. Lake Park, at a point about one mile from Kitzmiller, on the Deer Park-Kitzmiller highway.

Gibson was enroute to his home and Price and Beals were on their way to Kitzmiller. Price received lacerations about the head and one leg, the wound in his head requiring nine stitches. Gibson was cut about the face and arms and was considerably bruised, while Beals received various cuts and bruises.

The cars were practically demolished.

Mercury Touches Five Degrees Above Zero Two Days This Week

Five degrees above zero was the lowest temperature reading of the month at the Government station at Weber's. This figure was reached on both Sunday and Tuesday mornings, while on Monday morning the mercury registered 7 degrees above zero.

This is no record for November, however, it was stated, as the file shows zero weather during November in previous years.

The rainfall was 3.14 inches for the month.

SEVENTY-SEVEN ADDED TO RED CROSS ROLL CALL

Membership Reaches 225—No Report Yet From Several Towns

Seventy-seven more names were turned into Mrs. Samuel Cole, county chairman of the annual Red Cross Roll Call, bringing the total reported to date to 225.

While this represents only slightly more than one-third of the quota set by the National Red Cross headquarters, it was fully expected that as many more names would be turned in, which will bring the total to 400 or more.

No report has been received from Accident, Grantsville, Shallmar, Friendsville, and parts of Oakland, and additional names will be sent from towns already reported. Many people have also asked solicitors to return after the first of the month.

Christmas Savings Checks Mailed to Depositors

Christmas Savings checks to the amount of more than $15,000 were mailed on Wednesday evening, November 30, and received by over 200 depositors of the First National Bank and the Garrett National Bank this morning.

This additional amount of funds coming as it does at this time, will be a great boon, not only to local merchants, but to other citizens as well.

The two local banks have announced the opening of their new 1933 Christmas Savings clubs and anticipate a record membership, especially from those who neglected to be members of this year's clubs.

Accounts may be opened by paying so much each week, from 25 cents to $5.00. Accounts may be started at any time, the cashiers of both of the local banks, G. A. Fraley, of the Garrett National, and Delbert Davis, of the First National, stated yesterday.

To Represent County at Baltimore Banquet Tonight

Dr. Henry W. McComas, State Senator from Garrett county, left Oakland early this morning for Baltimore where he will represent the county at the dinner and historical entertainment celebrating the three hundredth anniversary of the signing of the Maryland Charter by the then King of England.

The dinner is being held at seven o'clock this evening at the Lord Baltimore Hotel. At the dinner Great Britain will be represented by Sir Wilmot Lewis, correspondent of the London Times newspaper. The Governor of Virginia will also be present as well as the Maryland executive.

Election Bet is Paid

An election bet has been paid; the peanut has been holled.

Tuesday evening, Harold Yutzy, of near town, rolled a peanut by his nose from in front of The Republican office on Second street to the Maryland Theatre on Third street, a ristance of two blocks, and all because President Hoover failed to carry 8 states on November 8.

The job was not as strenuous as it would seem. The peanut had a thin copper wire through it for an axle. Threads were attached to each end of the axle and another thread was fastened to Yutzy's nose by adhesive tape. By pulling gently the peanut rolled along in a most satisfactory manner.

FULL FORCE OF HUNTERS EXPECTING TO SEEK DEER

Open Season in Garrett County is From December 1 to 3

A large percentage of those who have obtained hunting licenses are expected to scour the forests and fields today, tomorrow, and Saturday in quest of one of the fleetest of animals, the deer.

The law states that a male deer with two or more points to one antler may be killed in Garrett county December 1 to 3, inclusive, and as a general rule, these three days are busy ones for the hunters, almost as dangerous, too, for the hunters, as for the deer.

In order to insure safety hunters place red patches of cloth on their hats and coats, and this custom has been effective in the county during the past few years, as no casualties have been reported.

Every person killing a deer shall report it to the State Game Warden within twenty-four hours, according to the law, giving name, address, hunter's license number, county and location where deer was killed.

It is unlawful to use any trap, snare, net, deerlick, pitfall, artificial light, battery or other contrivance or device for hunting or killing deer. About twenty-five were reported killed in Garrett county last year.

Garrett, Allegany and Washington counties are the only three counties having an open season on deer. The open season in Allegany and Washington is from December 1 to 15.

Civic Club Makes Appeal For Surplus of Belongings

An urgent appeal is being made by the Oakland Civic Club for a large collection of all surplus clothing and household furnishings, to be dispensed in the near future to those who are in need of them and have very little money with which to buy.

These articles are to be sold at a rummage sale at nominal prices, either in exchange for work or money, Miss Lottie Loar, president, stated this morning, and in this way it is hoped to reach everyone in need.

Any resident of Oakland who has a surplus of anything is asked to turn it over to the Civic Club. They may be taken to the grand jury room in the court house from two until four o'clock each day, or if a member of the Civic club is notified, a boy scout will call for the donation. The date of the sale will be announced later.

This action was decided at the regular meeting at the home of Mrs. F. E. Rathbun, Tuesday afternoon. Pictures of the seedlings of the famous Washington Elm tree were shown and Mrs. Frederick Thayer read the editorial appearing in last week's Republican concerning the bicentennial celebration just closed.

Merit Badges Awarded At Court Of Honor Meeting

Eleven merit badges were awarded to second and first class scouts of Oakland Troop No. 1 at the regular meeting of the Court of Honor held Monday evening in the Masonic clubroom.

Members of the court present included H. L. Jones, chairman; Harvey A. Loraditch, Dr. W. W. Grant, and Walter W. Dawson.

COUNTIES FORMULATE TAX RELIEF PROGRAM MONDAY

Seventeen Are Represented at Meeting Held at Annapolis—Legislative Program Outlined

CANNOT BE DEFERRED

Asserting that they had no intention of "unloading" on Baltimore city a part of their State tax burden, representatives of seventeen counties of Maryland meeting at Annapolis on Monday to plan reduction of county levies, decided to appoint a committee to meet with city representatives for a conference in their adopted program.

As outlined at the close of the meeting, which recessed on call of the chairman, the program of the counties' representatives involved:

Allocation of 1 cent of the 2-cent gasoline tax maintenance fund to the counties in the same manner as the 1½-cent construction fund tax now is distributed—for expenditure by the respective counties on county roads.

Reduction of the legal school levy rate for equalization fund participation from 67 cents to 40 cents in the counties.

Changing the State statutes to make petty larceny ($25 or less) a misdemeanor instead of a crime, to permit trial by magistrates and lower the county costs for keeping prisoners awaiting trial.

Diversion to the counties of all fines for automobile violations committed within their boundaries.

Bills embodying these proposals will be drafted by members of a legislative committee and copies, it was announced, would be sent to the County Commissioners in all parts of the State within a week or ten days.

Of the State's twenty-three counties, all except six were represented at the meeting by members of the boards of commissioners and counsel to the boards. In some cases, more than one member of a board was present. The counties represented were Allegany, Anne Arundel, Baltimore, Caroline, Carroll, Cecil, Dorchester, Frederick, Howard, Kent, Queen Anne's St. Mary's, Somerset, Talbot, Washington, Wicomico and Worcester. A letter was received and read from the board of Garrett county in which the members stated that public business prevented their presence at the meeting.

Legg Named Chairman

Former State Senator J. H. C. Legg, of Queen Anne's county, was named permanent chairman, and Theodore Panteleo, an employe of the Anne Arundel county roads department, was chosen permanent secretary. The meeting was held in Carvel Hall.

Mr. Legg, who is counsel to the Queen Anne's board, said "the time has come to act, because we can't delay this thing any longer."

"We have come here to represent the people back at home and we haven't come to see what the great Executive is going to do or to talk about the report which was made in The Sun yesterday (the report of the Hollander Tax Survey Commission)" he added.

Says Counties Must Be Heard

"The County Commissioners are responsible to the people of their counties, and they should not wait to see what somebody else is going to do. You know better what the people want, what they need. The Board of County Commissioners is just as sovereign a power as the great Executive so far as local government goes—far more capable than great commissions to tell the Legislature what the people of the counties of this State want.

"I don't imagine he'll (Governor Ritchie) finish his great plan until he hears from the twenty-three counties of the State. I say the great Executive and even the great members of the State Roads Commission (Brooke Lee) will have to listen when the counties come forward presenting a solid phalanx.'

Suggested by Balch

The appointment of the committee to acquaint Baltimore authorities with the aims and proposals of the county groups was suggested by Herbert C. Balch, of Talbot county, counsel to the Eastern Shore Association of County Commissioners.

Mr. Balch said:

"The organized forces of the administration have seen the way the wind is blowing and have started to work. The administration forces, perhaps properly, have organized, and we are attempting to form legislation perhaps to affect Baltimore city, and any MARCELLUS SANDERS had a shanty down on the shore, just above highwater mark. He was an aged fisherman and a clam-digger, wrinkled, of solitary life and crabbed disposition. To him came Mr. Whitney-Blake, one of the "rich folks" from "up on the hill." Marcellus had been purveyor of clams to the Whitney-Blake family for years—a sort of fishy feudal retainer as it were.

"Marcellus," said the plutocrat, "you know my daughter. Do you ever see her down here—with a young man—going sailing?"

"Sure," replied Marcellus, "comes down to the boathouse over there—goes off in that catboat—the Glide—moored off the end of the float."

"Whose boat is it?"

"Young man named Bascomb," growled Marcellus.

"It is as I suspected," thought the father and then: "Marcellus, the next time you see my daughter and that young man go out sailing together, go to the nearest telephone and call me up. If I can catch those two together I will give you five dollars."

"All right," said Marcellus. Over his heroic food the clam-digger mused deeply. Then he chuckled.

Mr. Whitney-Blake was strongly averse to a marriage between his daughter and Roger Bascomb. Bascomb was a newcomer to the community; had made himself immensely popular and had been paying decided attentions to Caroline. The wary father had investigated and found that Roger was fond of pleasure, deeply in debt and might justly be looked upon as a fortune hunter. Having acquired this knowledge he proceeded to talk to Caroline.

"Why, father," said she, "I haven't the faintest idea of marrying Roger Bascomb. I like him, of course—who could help liking such a good-natured, agreeable fellow?"

"I do wish, Caroline," said the father, "that, out of your many suitors, you would pick one of whom I could approve. There is Cyril Patterson, for instance."

"Oh, Cyril is well enough," laughed Caroline. "I am afraid it's the Patterson money you are thinking of, papa, more than of Cyril himself."

Mr. Whitney-Blake, a big business deal engaging his attention, relaxed his supervision of Caroline's love affairs. Then one day he received a jolt. He had been out to Denver looking after one of his many investments and as he got off the train he met Mandy Budlong just getting on.

"Ah, Mr. Blake," cried Mandy. "'bout time you got home. You'll be just in time for the wedding. Carrie goes out sailing 'most every afternoon now, and they do say—"

"All aboard!" shouted the impatient conductor and, with a firm hand, hustled the garrulous Mandy up the car steps.

Mr. Whitney-Blake thought rapidly for a full minute. Then he walked down to the shore, which was near the station, made his way to the shanty of Marcellus and had the interview described above. When he reached home Caroline greeted her father as a dutiful and loving daughter should. An hour or so after luncheon, while Mr. Whitney-Blake being busy with papers in his library, Caroline got into her runabout and drove out of the grounds. It might have been an hour or so later when the telephone bell rang and the voice of Marcellus said: "They've gone out sailing again. Expect 'em back about five." At five the wrathful parent was on the beach. But the wind had fallen and it was growing dusk before he saw the Glide come slowly in and pick up her moorings.

In the half light he could see that the catboat's crew consisted of a young man and a young woman. "I've got 'em," he thought. They entered the dingy and rowed ashore. Mr. Whitney-Blake was on the landing stage to receive them.

"Why, father!" cried Caroline. "You here? Cyril and I have had a delightful sail."

"Good evening, sir," said the cheery voice of Cyril Patterson. "Glad to see you back. May I come up to the house? I have something important I want to say to you regarding—er—er—Caroline."

"Certainly," replied Mr. Whitney-Blake blandly.

"Hi hi!" came the voice of Marcellus as the trio moved off.

"Excuse me a second," said Whitney-Blake and turned back.

"Where's that five dollars?" asked the fisherman.

"Five dollars!" returned the plutocrat, "you ought to get a punch in the jaw. Thought you told me my daughter was going out sailing with Roger Bascomb."

"Didn't," replied Marcellus. "Said 'twas Bascomb's boat. So 'tis. Patterson's chartered it for the summer."

"Why didn't you tell me that?" demanded Mr. Whitney-Blake.

Mr. Whitney-Blake saw that Caroline and Cyril were watching him. He pulled five dollars out of his pocket and handed it to the clam-digger.

"A little bill I owed Marcellus for clams," he explained as he rejoined them.

That's all except that Roger Bascomb married a rich widow two months after Cyril married Caroline, and that Mr. Whitney-Blake looks with admiration upon Marcellus as being the only man who ever got the best of him in a business deal.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

Quite a nice Thanksgiving was had by all. Especially by Archibaldson for the simple reason that Scoop and Company got moved out to the Hermitage, mansion, Castle by the State Road, or what have you, where fires are smoke, hot water is cold, and the bathtub is too small to sit in. But it's home, and what's more, it's homey.

And the endurance race is over. Each workman, with one exception, it seemed, tried to see how long it would take to do the work. They all held out until cold weather and there is now a tie for first place honors.

Because this will be a lesson to future couples and because it might awaken some memories in the old married folks, I will narrate a few details incident to moving.

It all started very peaceably on Wednesday morning of last week.

"Let's spend Thanksgiving in our new home," quoth she, rather suddenly and with longing in her eyes.

"O. k.," quoth he, me or I, just as enthusiastically, regardless of the vision of a vanishing turkey drumstick and a photo of the oven of our miniature range.

And so, after a hasty grab for food and clothes Wednesday evening, the family arrives at said mansion, the living room of which is papered on three sides, fireplace in accustomed position, but minus the mantle.

Water, which had been running for several days, failed to run. Thoughts of a frozen pipe and decision to get all water necessary from bottom of water tank. Carry water for bath, even if it isn't Saturday night. Attempt to sit in bathtub and stretch legs is complete failure, let alone reclining. Another real pleasure shot.

Next morning water still off. Investigation as to cause. Spy exposed pipe under porch. Borrow shovel from kindly neighbor, with usual promise to return it in exact position from which taken, and begin digging. Wife accidentally kicks gas pipe in kitchen and exposed pipe rattles. According to Sherlock Holmes' book on "How to Become a Detective," this meant that the exposed pipe was the gas line and not the water line at all. Operations suspended.

With Thanksgiving dinner to be served and no water available, bright idea suddenly pops into upper story. Maybe the town turned the water off. The town did. James Compton arrives. Inspects water meter and tank. Meter is hooked up backward which is entirely satisfactory to me as town will owe me at the end of the quarter. Further inspection reveals that hot water spiggots are cold and cold water spiggots are hot. The only thing left was to hook the gas meter to the water and have hot or cold water right in our own stove, at no extra cost. Rube Goldberg, with his famous inventions of Lucifer G. Butts would get several new ideas from the plumbing out there.

But Thanksgiving is Thanksgiving, and we were thankful we had water. Then the window shades had to go up because it would not be right and proper to parade in the front bedroom with lights on, and so near the State road, too. All were put up twice. How was I to know that they turned under instead of over? I was blind to the fact.

The best of everything, though, is that we like it. If you don't believe it, come out and see for yourself. And don't judge the book by its cover.

All my worries now are Bens. At 6:45 a. m. it is Little Ben. At eight o'clock, when I arrive at the office, it is Big Ben, and Big Ben from then on until 5:00 o'clock or far on into the night.

Two tales going around town ought to be investigated. One is that a person in the Hutton community who has as much of the do-re-mi as anybody else in this section is getting his share of Red Cross flour when it is distributed to the needy.

Another is that an Oakland man got some flour to distribute to the needy in the Sang Run community and then when it was delivered it was sold to some farmers thereabouts.

It's that kind of humanity that goes against the grain.

From Washington it is announced by the Council of Highway and Street Safety, that more than 33,000 persons were killed and more than a million injured by traffic accidents in 1931.

UNSAFE TO WORK ON AUTO INDOORS, IF MOTOR RUNS

Health Department Head Tells of Near Death Tragedy From Deadly Gas

One frosty night last week, Jack Martin—that isn't his real name, but it will do as well as any other— decided to do some tinkering on his automobile. The radiator, in particular, needed to be drained, and various other things needed to be attended to.

Knowing the danger of carbon monoxide poisoning, he kept the doors of the garage open while he worked. He fixed his soda solution, poured it into the radiator and started the engine, to warm up the water. Then he crawled under neath and began tightening some of the screws. He realized suddenly that he was getting light-headed. He crawled out from under the machine and started toward the open door. He collapsed before he reached it; fell; cut his mouth against the fender and lay there completely unconscious.

A boy of seventeen passed by on his way to study his lessons with a school chum. Chemistry happens to be one of the boy's favorite studies —especially the laboratory stuff, and the queer things that gas can do to you.

He saw the light in the garage; looked in; saw the figure collapsed over the fender; and heard the engine running.

He called for help, but Jack's family were all in the front of the house and nobody heard him. He didn't wait a second. He picked up Jack, dragged and carried him out into the air; laid him on his face on the pavement—this happened in Baltimore City—bent the arm farthest away and rested Jack's face on his hand; stretched out the other arm at full length over his head—this took less time than it takes to tell it—straddled Jack's body and began pressing his ribs in and out, to force oxygen into his lungs.

Meanwhile he kept his eyes open for passing machines. One came along; he and the driver lifted their still unconscious burden into the car and rushed him into a nearby hospital. The hospital doctors pumped oxygen from a tank into Jack's lungs for forty-five minutes before he came to.

"This is a true story," Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the State Department of Health said in telling it. "It happened to a member of the staff of the State Department of Health. It shows more strongly than anything I can say that it isn't safe to do work of any sort, on an automobile, a truck, a motorcycle, or on any other motor-driven vehicle, INDOORS, while the engine is running, even though the doors are open.

"Carbon monoxide, the gas generated in the exhaust of the engine, is colorless and odorless. It is a deadly poison. It gives no warning. It did not get in its deadly work this time, because the door was open, a certain amount of fresh air got in, and the boy, who knew what to do and did it, came along at that moment.

"As to the boy," Dr. Riley said, "that's the kind we raise in this country. We have reason to be proud of them."

Total for November is 99—Two Applicants Are Refused

Twenty-two marriage licenses were issued during the week ending Monday at noon from the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court in Oakland. THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

There is a sense in which the several agencies of the American Bible Society and the British and Foreign Bible Society have become the spiritual descendants of the ancient monasteries as depositories of the Holy Scriptures. Not that in these depositories the Sacred Word is preserved as in the convents of antiquity, but rather do they serve as reservoirs from which the wayfaring man may draw the water of lie when weary and athirst.

There are two such reservoirs in which the Maryland Bible Society has peculiar interest, as they have been presented by it to the American Bible Society to better serve both the Orient and the Occident.

The first is at Cristobal, Canal Zone, and is known as "The House at the Crossroads of the World."

The second, completed in 1928, standing where Orient and Occident meet, at Peiping, China, is presided over by Rev. Carlton Lacy.

Mr. R. R. Gregory is charged with the responsibility of serving the Caribean agency, with headquarters at Cristobal. As an indication of the quality of service rendered by Mr. Gregory in his house by the side of the road, I quote from a recent report: "The Panama Canal is oftentimes called the 'Crossroads of the New World.' The Bible House is a stone's throw away from the entrance through which most all the passengers arriving at the Atlantic side of the Canal have to pass in order to enter Cristobal or Calon. This is a very busy center where we meet all sorts of people. With the changing conditions in Spanish-speaking America, the increase of tourists is very noticeable. The other day a lady tourist rushed into the Bible House and asked for a Bible. She had just received a cable from a Rabbi friend and wanted to know what the Old Testament verse meant which he quoted in the cable. We did not make a sale, but we had the satisfaction of bringing joy to her heart, for the verse read: 'The Lord make His face shine upon thee and be gracious unto thee.' During the year 1931 one hundred and seven missionaries, representing twenty-one different missionary organizations, availed themselves of the missionary quarters at the Bible House, from one day to five weeks. Many and varied are the calls that come to us from missionaries. Some write asking it we can provide lodging for them at such and such a time. Others ask us to book passage for them and perhaps look after their stray baggage; or else they request us to rebill freight shipments or to buy certain articles and send them along with missionaries who are soon to pass through. We are always glad to accommodate them, if we know exactly what is wanted. With the coming and going of so many people through the canal, the Bible House finds a large opportunity to sell Bibles and Testaments and distribute thousands of Portions.'"

Like a lighthouse standing where great ships pass, stands theB ible House at Cristobal, proclaiming Ilim who is the light of the world, and who declared: "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Sterling and children, of Loch Lynn, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Albert Sisk.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Welch accompanied Messrs. Henry Smouse, Carl Frazee, and Harvey Speicher to the Chicago stock show.

Mrs. Noah Slabach and Mrs. Clarence Fulk and daughter Nellie, spent one day last week with Miss Susie Petersheim.

Mr. W. B. Burruss, of Washington, took dinner at J. A. Shaffer's, at Mason, on Saturday.

Messrs. Simon Swartzentruber and Elwood Schlossnagle accompanied Mr. Leo Fike to the Meyersdale Creamery one day last week.

Mulch Protects Plants From Heat Rather Than Cold

That a winter mulch of straw or leaves, or a covering of burlap, is a protection to tender shrubs or other perennial plants from heat rather than cold, will come as a surprise to many gardners. Yet, this is the statement of Mark M. Shoemaker, assistant specialist in landscape gardening for the University of Maryland Extension Service.

The real purpose of the mulch, he states, is to prevent the sun from thawing out the ground too rapidly, as therein lies the danger to the roots. Successive freezings and thawings tend to heave newly planted perennials out of the ground, he says.

It is not likely, according to Mr. Shoemaker, that freezing of the ground can be prevented by the depth of mulch ordinarily put on. He advises waiting until after the first heavy frost, or freeze, before doing this garden chore and then doing it while the ground is still frozen.

Pruning in the fall or early spring is perfectly safe for some types of flowering shrubs, this specialist says, but it is disastrous for other types. He points out that some kinds of shrubs, such as forsythea, flowering quince, and welgela, which bloom early in the year, produce flowers on wood made the previous summer. Pruning that kind of plants in fall or early spring, he states, removes wood that would bear bloom. Late summer and fall-blooming shrubs, such as hydrangea, althea, or crepe-myrtle, bloom on wood made during the current season and may be pruned safely.

Without worrying about the reasons, Mr. Shoemaker says, it is a safe rule in most cases to prune immediately after blooming.

HOOVER AND THE FOREIGN DEBTS

Americans are so accustomed to having Mr. Heover do the right and courageous thing that his admirable statement on the debts will hardly occasion much surprise. It covers a complex issue, endlessly bedeviled by national prejudices and selfishness, clearly, fairly and with a minimum of words.

There can be no serious reply to Mr. Hoover's recommendation of a body to examine and reconsider the debts, functioning by virtue of an identity of personnel with the conferences upon economics and disarmament. Regardless of whether revision is practicable or not and assuming as a postulate that cancellation is an unthinkable word for the American mind, such action is the only business-like response to the request of friendly governments.

Similarly with the President's suggestion, doubtless designed to meet the present exigencies of the British pound, that in an extraordinary situation this country might waive payment here and accept foreign currency earmarked abroad. There can be no proper objection to this course. If Mr. Hoover finds it necessary to lay such an appeal before Congress when it reassembles we cannot believe that even a hostile legislaure would reject it.

There seems a strange misunderstanding in some quarters as to whose worry the debt problem is. It is certainly not Mr. Hoover's if he does his duty as he sees it. What grief may come from it is inevitably Mr. Roosevelt's, who takes over the whole issue and responsibility on March 4.

We think the country will be disappointed that Mr. Roosevelt could not see his way to cooperate in respect to this particular issue, involving no domestic problem. If non-partisanship is ever possible it should be in respect to such foreign problems. But on Mr. Roosevelt's side it is to be said that he has not yet chosen his advisers, and that he was suddenly confronted by a complex issue with which he had no opportunity to familiarize himself.

It may be recalled that during the campaign there was heat and resentment in Democratic quarters when it was argued that a change of administration inevitably meant marking time for a number of months. Mr. Hoover has now done his utmost to prevent such a delay in respect to the debt issue. Mr. Roosevelt has felt unable to aid him. The delay must ensue.

THE WAR DEBTS

The New York World-Telegram, which supported Mr. Roosevelt's campaign for the Presidency, already finds cause to criticize him on his war debt program. The World-Telegram said a day or two ago:

"President Hoover's war debt policy as set forth Wednesday represents a high type of statesmanship. It is a call for action while the house is on fire. President-elect Roosevelt's reply is a too clever attempt at party mancuvering, unworthy of the man and of the hope which the electorate reposed in him.

"Mr. Hoover can and will ask Congress for action. But Mr. Roosevelt can block action because he controls the session of Congress which meets in ten days."

The only question at issue between President Hoover and Mr. Roosevelt is whether a commission representing Congress shall negotiate on the war debts immediately or whether the world shall wait until Mr. Roosevelt becomes President so he may negotiate personally through diplomatic channels.

Mr. Roosevelt's choice does not do credit to him.

First, he chooses to ignore the imperative necessity to maintain good feeling and even economic stability in the countries abroad which owe us money and which, as he states, are justified in seeking a hearing on the debts. Next, he forgets how badly Woodrow Wilson, his former chief, fared when he attempted personally to negotiate foreign treaties.

By his attitude he has delayed an orderly, well-considered examination of the war debts problem, and thru which delay, and thru the uncertainty this will create, can only come a further postponement in our economic recovery.

300,514 AUTO TAG BLANKS ARE NOW BEING SENT OUT

Motorists Given Instructions On Filling Out Applications

After more than a month of preparation, 300,514 application blanks for the 1933 license tags for Maryland automobilists were placed in the mails in Baltimore on Friday.

Since October 13, twenty-six elerks and employes in the office of the Automobile Commissioner have been preparing the blanks.

Taxes Must Be Paid First

With each blank are three slips of paper. One instructs the recipient to inspect the application for errors, to sign it in ink and to return the application with a check or money order. Applicants are warned against sending cash.

The second slip warns that the application must bear the perforation of the office of the Bureau of Receipts, showing that the taxes on the motor vehicle have been paid and warns that the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles must be satisfied of the payment of the tax before tags will be issued. Applicants are instructed not to send their tax bills or receipts.

Concerns Postage Fees

The third slip contains a notice of correction in the postage fees. Residents of Baltimore are told to add 9 cents to their money orders instead of 11 cents, as indicated on the application blank, while county residents are instructed to add 12 cents instead of 14 cents indicated on the blank.

In mailing the blanks this year the residents of Baltimore were put into one division, while blanks in the counties were sorted into groups of residents of each county and then subdivided by the towns and cities of that county.

COUNTIES FORMULATE TAX RELIEF PROGRAM MONDAY

proposed attempts to shift the burden of taxation and place it on the State may meet with opposition in Baltimore city—I'm talking practical politics and don t mind saying so. We have the balance of power and all Baltimore is not in accord with us.

Must Be Done Without Delay

Mr. Balch then suggested the committee to wait on Mayor Jackson and other Baltimore authorities, asserting in effect that the counties must reach the city representatives without delay. He added:

"If representatives of the State Roads Commission can whisper to the representatives of Baltimore city—I know something is going on. I haven't had a night at home that I haven't been visited by some government official and told the County Commissioners are helpless; that we have no legislative power.

"In order to put through any legislation we must deal with Baltimore city. I thought, perhaps naively, that we could put through the program and not meet resistance. I find we have got to have contact.

Cooperation Essential

"I propose that this committee, due to the emergency in our meeting, appoint a small committee to meet with the representatives of Baltimore city. I confess we are done unless we get the cooperation of Baltimore city."

Intimating that the plans proposed by the County Commissioners at their first meeting two weeks ago, which, in substance, were the same as indorsed again yesterday, were meeting with opposition from forces backed by Governor Ritchie, Mr. Balch asserted:

"As Gorman had his Lowndes, and Hoover his Roosevelt, Albert Ritchie may profit by their example."

Mr. Balch said representatives of the county organizations "may have to go over the State making speeches" in favor of their program.

Cites Letter From Mayor

Saying that those who represented the Eastern Shore "should not return to the Eastern Shore tonight without something definite being done." Mr. Legg offered to the meeting a letter sent by Mayor Jackson, telling of his interest in the counties' problems. The Mayor inclosed a copy of the speech he made Saturday at a meeting of the Board of Estimates, addressed to the National Economy League, and the Efficiency Commission, and other organizations who urged further reduction of the $2.89 tax rate for Baltimore city.

This was referred to a committee to digest and report in substance. Bruce Dean, of Caroline county, who made the report, said:

"About all he says is talk to the people about reducing taxes, and about it being a big problem to feed the poor—$3,000,000 a year to do it—and that he's going to take it up with the next Legislature to pay for it with bonds to be paid by the State instead of the city. I don't see any reason why the State has any more right to feed people there than it would with us. The balance is about local problems."

Harmony Sought

Mr. Balch, after this report was made, again moved the appointment of the committee to meet with Baltimore authorities "with power to discuss the situation of the association and report back and if possible, to work in harmony with Baltimore city." This, he said, "will kill for all time the idea that the counties are antagonistic to Baltimore city."

Chairman Legg interrupted to say he met his "political Waterloo when he stood with Baltimore county against Baltimore city on the annexation bill" when he was a member of the State Senate.

"They told me that Baltimore city could do without the counties and I tell them the counties can do without Baltimore city—we can go to Wilmington and Philadelphia."

Committee Named

Then Mr. Legg appointed the following committee to make contact with Baltimore city: Rex Taylor, of Wicomico county; Mr. Balch, Robert C. Clarke, Baltimore County; John P. Wachtel, Washington county, and David Sloan, Allegany county. Later Mr. Legg was added as an ex-officio member.

This was followed by the appointment of James P. Kelly, Baltimore county; W. H. Price, Worcester county; Harrison Vickers, Kent county; Benjamin Michaelson, Anne Arundel county, and W. Clinton McSherry, Frederick county, as a committee to draft the bills for the proposed legislation.

Amon Burgee, Frederick county; C. F. Sybert, Howard county. and Edwin S. Dorcus, Cecil county, were named to study the report of the State Tax Survey Commission, with which Mr. Legg said, "we might agree on some things and disagree on others."

Will Draft Bills

Mr. McSherry announced that he, with Mr. Kelly, of Baltimore county, would draft the bill providing for the allocation of the 1 cent of the gasoline tax from the maintenance fund to the counties, to draft the bill lowering the legal school levy from 67 to 40 cents, and Mr. Vickers, Kent county, to draft the proposed changes in the criminal statues to make larceny of $25 or less a misdemeanor. Mr. Michaelson, Anne Arundel county, was appointed to draft the bill giving the counties fines for automobile law violations.

Mr. Legg said he was "seriously opposed" to the proposed change in the criminal statues affecting larceny, and that he was going to fight it." "It's a very bad law," he said, whereupon Mr. Vickers said "we all know you (Mr. Legg) have a big civil practice as well as a big criminal practice."

To which Mr. Legg replied that he had the "worst paying criminal practice in the State."

The meeting adjourned somewhat abruptly shortly before 4 p. m. when the Eastern Shore delegates announced they wished to get the ferry at that hour.

Survey Report Discussed

Meantime, however, there had been brief discussion of the Tax Survey Commission's report, the majority favoring the proposals contained therein, especially the ten percent tax on winning pari-mutual bets at the State's four race tracks.

Previously the county representatives had indorsed a proposal to cut the legal school levy from 67 to 30 cents. The Tax Survey report proposed a cut at today's meeting. The State Board of Education has estimated that this could be done if the State would underwrite fifty percent of the "minimum standard" of education in Maryland. This would include Baltimore city, where fifty percent of the minimum education required by law could be financed by approximately 13 cents on the tax rate, according to the State Department of Education.

Fund Required

Under this plan the State would appropriate slightly more than $3,000,000 more for schools than it did for 1932, and set up an equalization fund of sufficient amount to bring up to standard the schools of any county which could not be so maintained with a 40-percent levy.

Considerable criticism was directed from time to time at E. Brooke Lee, member of the State Roads Commission, who appeared at the last meeting of the county representatives and advocated absorption by the State highway system of all first-class county roads.

Mr. Lee proposed that these be maintained by the State Roads Commission rather than allocating the funds to the Boards of County Commissioners of the various counties to do the same work.

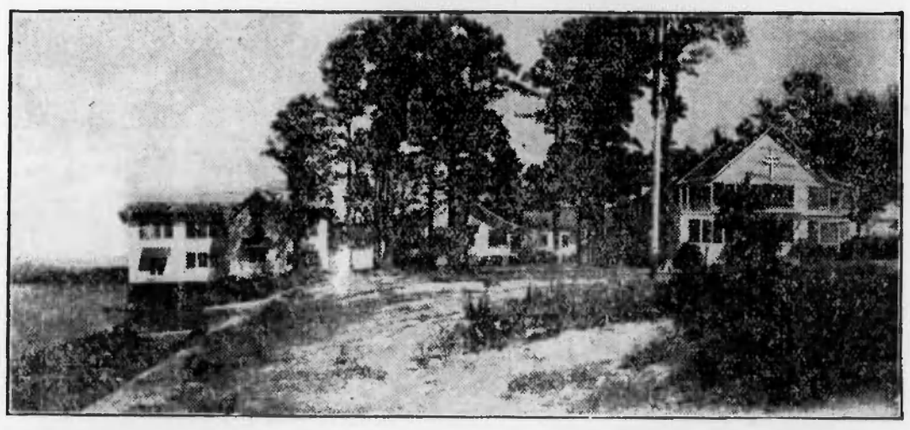
GHRISTMAS SEALS BRING HEALTH AND HAPPINESS TO THE MANY MIRACLE HOUSE CHILDREN

YEAR ROUND OPERATION PLANNED - MONEY FOR MAINTAINANCE NEEDED



Purchasers of Christmas Seals last year will be pleased to learn that they had a financial part in bringing health and happiness to one hundred and forty-seven Maryland children who received treatment at the Miracle House this year. It is difficult to estimate the value of this preventive treatment to these children, the majority of whom were from tuberculosis homes. They entered the Miracle House undernourished and underweight, and in this run-down condition were ready subjects to tuberculosis, if some special care had not been provided for them.

The Miracle House this year was in operation 122 days. Only lack of funds prevented the Maryland Tuberculosis Association from extending the period of operation. Officials of the tuberculosis association are hoping that the twenty-sixth annual Christmas Seal campaign which will open on Thanksgiving Day and continue until Christmas, will produce enough funds to operate the preventorium as an all-year-round institution.

The children this year came from all sections of the state. Nineteen counties were represented as well as Baltimore City. The average length of treatment was 69 days. The total patient days number 10,208. The highest gain to reach normal weight was 15½ pounds. More than a quarter ton of weight was gained by the children during the season.

One of the outstanding pieces of health work started this year was the establishing of a corrective deatal clinic for the children. This work was sponsored by the Division of Oral Hygiene of the Maryland State Department of Health. The purpose of the program was to decrease the possibility of systemic infection through the teeth. The results obtained demonstrated the value of the clinic and it is planned to make the program an annual one.

The clinics were held over a period of several weeks and the corrective treatments given were:

Number of children examined	116
Number with dental defects	99
Number of children with work completed	99
Total operations	447
Total number sittings	185
Number fillings inserted	207
Number teeth extracted	118
Number prophylactic treatments	65
Other treatments	51
Other operations	6

TUBERCULOSIS DEATH RATE MOUNTS IN ELEVEN COUNTIES

STATE RATE DECLINES

Eleven Maryland comties in 1931 showed an increase in tuberculosis deaths over the previous year according to statistics compiled by Doctor John Collinson, Chief, Bureau Vital Statistics, State Department of Health. The State as a nnit in 1931 showed a decline in tuberculosis deaths of 3.2 per 100,000 population. The deaths in 1931 numbered 1587 or 31 less deaths than the 1618 recorded in 1930.

The counties showing increases in 1931 were Allegany, Anne Arundel, Baltimore, Charles, Dorchester, Frederick, Garrett, Kent, Queen Anne, St. Mary's, and Wicomico. Caroline county showed the same number of deaths in 1931 as in 1930, which was 20. All other counties had a decline in the tuberculosis death rate.

"BUY CHRISTMAS SEALS"

When you make up your Christmae list, be sure to remember the Christmas Seal. Small in eize, it has dona a big job in Maryland and still has great things to do in these days of stress. One out of every five persons who dies between the agee of 15 and 45 falls a victim of tuberculosis.

CHRISTMAS SEALS FINANCE PRICELESS HEALTH WORK

The health activities of the Maryland Tuberculosis Association, made possible by the annual sale of Christmas Seals, embraces the entire state.

A brief outline of tho services rendered by the association follows:

Free chest clinic services in the counties of Maryland in cooperation with the Maryland State Health Department.

Industrial clinics in the city of Baltimore for employees who have been referred by their own physicians for expert diagnosis.

The Miracle House, maintained as a preventorium for undernourished and underweight children who have been in contact with tuberculosis.

Save the Children

Christmas belongs to the children. Despite privation, undernourishmeat and even want, there are few firesides where somebody's sacrifice, or somebody's inventivo genius, will not make possible a recognition of the day so children's voices may be raised in gladness.

Christmas Seals belong to the children, too. The most important work they do is to protect children from tuberculosis. This year the seal itself shows two youngsters with faces upturned in gladness as they sing carols in the snow. Each seal is a direct appeal for help from the children of America, who suffer most from the effects of privation, undernourishment and want.

Christmas comes but once a year, and childhood once a lifetime.

The Maryland Sweet Potato

Maryland produces one and one-half to two million bushels of sweet potatoes annually. In 1931 the crop was valued at more than a million dollars. Sweet potatoes rank third in value among the vegetable crops grown in the State. The quality of Maryland sweet potatoes cannot be excelled, due to exceptionally favorable soil and climate for their production.

The Maryland sweet potato with its yellow color and decided flavor makes the most common-place meal attractive and appetizing. The sweet potato can be kept four to six months if stored in a warm, dry place and it is a cheap, wholesome food. In using the sweet potato we need to keep in mind its likeness in food value to the Irish potato. It is chiefly an energy-giving food, so should be used as the main energy-giving dish at a meal and not an extra along with Irish potatoes, rice or macaroni. Because of their sweet flavor, they combine well with tart foods, such as apples or pineapple, and with decidedly flavored meats, such as ham.

Smothered Ham with Sweet Potatoes.

One slice ham, ? c. raw sliced sweet potatoes, 1 T. butter or ham fryings, 2 T. brown sugar, 1 c. hot water.

Brown ham slightly on both sides. Cover with potatoes, sprinkle with sugar or honey, add water and fat. Cover and bake slowly until ham is tender, remove lid and brown. (Halves of apples or pineapple may be placed on top of potatoes.)

Potato Pigs In Blankets

Wrap cooked sweet potatoes (2 in. in diameter) with sliced bacon, cook in oven or on top of stove until bacon is crisp and potatoes heated through.

Sweet Potato Nut Loaf

Three c. sweet potatoes (mashed), 1 egg beaten, ¾ c. dry bread crumbs, ¼ t. pepper, 1 c. chopped nut meats, ¼ c. fat, 1 t. salt.

Mash potatoes while hot, add to them 2-3 of nut meats, fat, salt, pepper, half of crumbs and beaten egg. Thoroughly grease the mold and sprinkle thickly with remaining crumbs and nut meats mixed, shaking out any that do not adhere to the mold or pan. Turn in the mixture, pack tight. Cover top with remaining crumbs and nuts. Bake ½ hour in moderate oven. Serve with tomato sauce.

Sweet Potato and Pineapple

Six small sweet potatoes, 2 slices or 2-3 c. grated pineapple, ⅓ c. maple sugar or brown sugar, ¼ c. liquid (water or fruit juice). Cut boiled skinned potatoes in ¼ inch pieces. Pour part of sugar mixture in baking dish. Add potatoes and pineapple. Pour remaining sugar mixture over top and bake for 10 minutes in moderately hot oven (400 degrees F.) Marshmallows may be placed on top, if desired.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)
©, 1932, Western Newspaper Union.

Lesson for December 4

LIVING WITH PEOPLE OF OTHER RACES

I KINGS 8:41-43; John 4:5-10; Acts 10:30-35.

GOLDEN TEXT—Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respector of persons. Acts 10:34.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Telling a Foreigner of Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The God of All Nations.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Playing Fair with Other Nations.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Following Christ in Dealing with Other Races.

The approach to the heart of this lesson is through the Golden Text. Paul on Mars' Hill declared, "God hath made of one blood all the nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth" (Acts 17:26).

I. Solomon Praying for Foreigners (1 Kings 8:41-43).

The church has for its task the preaching of the gospel to lost men of all races. Christ came to seek and to save the lost (Luke 19:10).

II. Christ Dealing With a Foreigner (John 4:4-10).

1. Jesus must needs go through Samaria (vv. 4-5). Because of the growing opposition Jesus was obliged to leave Judea. He must "needs go through Samaria," not because there was not another way to reach Galilee, but in order to find this poor sinful woman and the needy citizens of Sychar.

2. Jesus testified to the woman (vv. 6-19).

a. A favor asked (v. 7). He tactfully made a request which appealed to the woman's sympathy. In introducing the conversation, he referred to that which was uppermost in her mind, water. This was the teacher's point of contact. He soon passed from a reference to earthly water to the water of everlasting life, in himself.

b. Jesus' tender dealing with the woman (vv. 10-15). He first appealed to her curiosity by declaring "If thou knewest the gift of God" (v. 10). He knew the deep unrest of the soul of this sinful woman. He knew that if she really knew him she would believe on him and be saved from her sins. He followed this appeal to her curiosity by a promise which directed her attention to her deepest needs.

c. The woman convicted of her sins (vv. 15-19). Before she could understand what the water of life was she must be convicted of her sin. She did not argue with him, but became a humble inquirer.

III. The Salvation of a Foreigner (Acts 10:30-35).

The Jews hated the Romans because they were under bondage to them. Peter, the head of the Apostolic group, was a Jew of strong prejudice. The time had now come for the removal of the wall of partition between the Jews and the Gentiles. Cornelius, a Roman soldier, was a devout and praying man, though not saved. Two visions were given:

1. To Cornelius (Acts 10:3-8). While engaged in prayer an angel from God instructed him to send to Joppa for Peter who would tell him what to do.

2. To Peter (Acts 10:9-16). Peter saw in a vision a certain vessel containing clean and unclean animals let down from heaven, and heard the command to arise, slay, and eat. This vessel let down from heaven and taken back again indicated that both Jew and Gentile were accepted on high. At the bidding of the Spirit, Peter went with the messenger, and in his sermon to Cornelius he set forth.

a. The basis of salvation—the death of Christ.

b. The scope of salvation—whosoever believeth on him.

c. The method of appropriation of the salvation—faith in Christ.

IV. All Nations Are of One Blood (Acts 17:22-28).

The way to bring peace among the nations is to make God known.

1. Paul's declaratoin concerning God (vv. 24-25).

a. The Creator of the universe.

b. His spirituality and immensity. Being essentially Spirit, heart worship of him is demanded, and being infinite, he cannot be confined to earthly temples.

c. His act of providence. He declared that in him we live and move and have our being.

2. Paul's declaration concerning man (vv. 26-28).

a. We are the offspring of God (v. 28).

b. Nations have their place by God's purpose.

c. Man should seek God. These truths concerning God and man as declared and received will remove racial and national barriers.

WORDS OF WISDOM

Death means birth into a fuller life.

The best and purest of all joys is natural affection.

MT. LAKE PARK

Has Collection of Rifles

Mr. Fred. C. Fleming, of Fairmont, West Va., who together with Mrs. Fleming, spends much of his time at his cottage here, has for his hobby the collection of guns, revolvers, pistols and other paraphernalia of the chase. His collection, consisting, among other things, of about 35 guns and the same number of pistols and revolvers, is a very complete and interesting one. Many of them are relics of forgotten days when the possession of a firearm was a very necessary equipment, and upon which frequently depended the defense of home and even life and the supply of food. Indeed, several have been used by their former owners to take human life and one saved the life of an officer in the army when he was attacked at night by an enemy in the Philippines. A rifle in the collection was carried by a man who was killed when it was struck by lightning.

He has an old flint lock blunderbus of the type used by the Pilgrim fathers. It may have descended from that period, for it is very old.

In his collection, also, is the largest, as well as the smallest, pistol capable of firing a metallic cartridge. Another is an ancient swivel gun which can be baited and can only be discharged by the action of pulling on the bait.

An interesting relic which Mr. Fleming has just acquired is a 150-year old bear trap. It was made by a blacksksmith by the name of Wolf for Jacob Rheinhart, of Preston county, West Va., and descended to his son, Jacob Rheinhart, Jr. It was then sold to George Root, of Preston county and afterwards given to his son David E. Root, of Tucker county, W. Va., from whom it was bought by Mr. Fleming. A great many bears have been caught in the trap, the last one a year ago, in Tucker county, W. Va.

Beyond the County

In Denver, a man, after an altercation with his wife, grabbed a bottle, bade his wife good bye, drank the contents and laid down to die. His wife smiled. It was a bottle of laundry bluing.

At Clarksburg, West Va., on Monday the new Harrison County court house, paid for by direct levy, was dedicated. John W. Davis, a former resident and at one time candidate for President of the United States, delivered the oration.

At Cambridge, Md., Sunday, a father and son, while hunting in a marsh, froze to death while another son, being rescued, is in a serious condition.

In Texas, a woman seeing the fence surrounding her home on fire, threw a pail of water on it and was knocked unconscious, it having been charged by the falling of a high voltage wire. A jury awarded her $5,000 damages.

In Detroit, at a hospital which he had endowed, Henry Ford underwent a major operation and is said to be recovering.

In Pittsburgh, a squad of policemen, returning from raiding an alleged gambling house, found some thief had stolen their official automobile.

At Cambridge, Mass, what ls thought to be an attempt to polson a District Attorney and four justices was revealed when a quantity of white powder was discovered in four separate water pitchers used by them.

Bethel School Attendance

The following pupils of Bethel public school had perfect attendance for the month of November:

Russel Virtz, Philip Howell, Ruth Tasker, Homer Davis, John Virtz, Almeda Howell, John Davis, Mabel Howell, Catherine Virtz, Howard Davis and James Virtz.

Universal Bible Sunday

The observance of Universal Bible Sunday on next Sunday, December 4, by the churches of Maryland, is being urged by the American Bible Society.

The American Bible Society, an international and interdenominational agency engaged in the circulating of the Scriptures, and which last year put into distribution nearly ten million volumes of Scriptures in fifty different countries and in upwards of 200 languages, has promoted Universal Bible Sunday for over a decade. Many churches in America and in foreign lands will unite in the observance of Universal Bible Sunday in order to emphasize the important place the Bible holds in the development of Christian life and character.

POSTMASTER URGES EARLY CHRISTMAS MAILING HERE

Mail Will Be Delivered In Oakland Until Midnight Saturday, Christmas Eve

SCHEDULE IS SUGGESTED

With approximately four times as much mail to be handled during the month of December as for the average month of the year, Postmaster Lawrence M. Fraley is urging all patrons of the local office to do their Christmas shopping early and mailing early.

To insure delivery before Christmas the postmaster suggests the following schedule: December 12, Pacific Coast states; December 15, other states west of the Mississippi and Florida; December 16, all southern states, New England states, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana and Kentucky; December 18, Ohio, New York, Delaware and New Jersey; December 19, West Virginia, Pennsylvania and Maryland, outside of Garrett county; December 22, city of Oakland and Garrett county towns.

"There appears to be some confusion on the part of the public with respect to the rate of postage on Christmas and other greeting cards sent under cover of unsealed envelopes," Postmaster Fraley stated.

"Printed greeting cards mailed in unsealed envelopes are chargeable with postage at the third-class rate of one and one-half cents for each two ounces or fraction; the one-cent-drop-letter rate applicable at non-letter carrier offices does not apply to such cards in unsealed envelopes.

"Printed Christmas and other greeting cards in unsealed envelopes may bear a simple written inscription not in the nature of personal correspondence, together with the name and address of the sender and of the addressee, without subjecting them to more than third-class rates.

"Greeting cards sealed or unsealed, bearing written messages other than the simple inscriptions of Merry Christmas, best wishes, etc., are chargeable with postage at the first-class rate of three cents."

All parcels should be carefully and securely wrapped, with address written plainly on one side of the package. The postmaster also urges that stamps be purchased early to avoid any "waits" in line at the stamp window near Christmas time, when everybody is in a hurry and the usual last hour rush is on.

There will be a delivery made on Saturday afternoon, December 24, but there will be no city delivery, village delivery, rural delivery or window service on Christmas day or the day following. Star routes will operate as usual.

Specials and perishable mail will be handled and the usual mail entering the postoffice to be sent out will be dispatched as usual.

Miss Harper To Demonstrate Christmas Lighting Effects

A demonstration with explanations and suggestions for interior decorations for the home at Christmas, will be given by Miss Betty Harper, home service representative of the Monongahela System, in the electric store of that company on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, December 8, 9 and 10, it has been announced from the chief office of the company.

Miss Harper will have samples of simple, inexpensive decorations and will be glad to help those interested with the decorations of their homes for the holiday season.

This movement of decorative lighting, which has been growing for the past five years, has now become a part of the country's observance of the Christmas season.

Miss Harper will assist anyone interested in making these home decorations and has invited the women of Oakland and vicinity to come to the store at any time during the days above mentioned.

Stocking Big Youghiogheny River With Trout

The first consignment of several hundred rainbow trout was placed in the Youghiogheny River below Swallow Falls this week by Ralph Miller of the State hatchery at Bear Creek, and Richard S. Browning, deputy game warden. The trout ranged in size from 12 to 18 inches and some of them reached 22 inches, it was stated.

CITY COUNCIL PROPOSES LIBRARY AND BAND BILL

Would Require Annual Appropriations for Organizations

That the Garrett County Free Public Library and Gilbert-Brown Boys' Band of Oakland would be partly supported by the taxpayers of Oakland through the Mayor and City Council, is the substance of a bill which is bedrawn to be sent to the Maryland Legislature for enactment into law when it convenes in January.

The bill will require the Mayor and Council of Oakland to appropriate a reasonable sum annually for the library and band. Decision to have this proposed legislation prepared was announced at the regular meeting of the City Council held Monday evening.

A new ordinance, governing the reading of water meters and the collection of water rents, was introduced and read for the first time at the Monday night meeting. It will be voted on and probably passed at the January meeting.

The Waingold garage property was sold to Clarence Murphy for the sum of $1,350, and the final payment of the year to the local fire department, amounting to $750, was made. Monthly bills amounting to approximately $1,500 were ordered paid.

Permit for the erection of a garage was issued to Harold M. Dawson.

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER IS SHOT IN SIDE SATURDAY

John M. Thayer, Local Instructor, Not Seriously Injured

John M. Thayer, of Grafton, W. Va., mathematics instructor in the Oakland high school, was accidentally shot through the abdomen Saturday while hunting deer near Swallow Falls, eight miles north of Oakland. The bullet went through his left side and lodged in his hand.

Mr. Thayer, whose condition was reported as not serious, was taken to his home in Grafton after being attended by Dr. N. I. Broadwater, following his removal to Oakland in Bolden's ambulance from the scene of the accident.

Beldon Ramsey. of Oakland, from whose rifle the shot was fired, said he and another youth were shooting at a target at Ramsey's camp, near the Falls, with a .22 calibre rifle. Mr. Thayer had joined the party and in some manner got in the path of the bullet.

The accident was the only casualty reported during the three-day deer hunting season in this county which closed Saturday. The report that Harvey Durst, of near Grantsville, had been killed by a shot through his head, was false.

TRUCK DRIVER IS ROBBED AND WOUNDED BY GUNMEN

Returning From Deer Park to Morgantown, Charles Kenny Is Held Up and Robbed

SHOT THROUGH THE HAND

Surprised by three armed highwaymen as he stood on Route 7, near Greer, West Va., a small village located midway between Kingwood and Morgantown, about 8 o'clock Tuesday night, Charles Kenny, 29 years old, of Westover, near Morgantown, who is employed as a driver for the American Oil Company, was robbed of about $150 and shot through the left hand. The bandits fled in an automobile following the shooting and robbery.

Kenny, though bleeding considerably from the wound in his hand and suffering from shock, took his truck to Morgantown and is a patient in the Morgantown City Hospital.

Trooper A. J. Morgan, who talked with the victim, said Kenny was returning with his truck from Deer Park when the machine ran out of gas. He got down from the seat to put an emergency supply in the tank when the three men came down the highway from a point back of him, ordering him to put up his hands and keep quiet.

He complied, but the gunmen, who were plainly nervous, shot wild, the bullet piercing the palm of Kenny's hand. An accomplice of the man who did the shooting had previously relieved Kenny of the cash on his person. When the shooting occurred the men fled in their automobile and have not yet been captured.

The driver of the oil truck was unable to give the license number of the automobile in which the highwaymen were traveling and was also unable to describe the car, except in a general way.

Kenny's wound is not expected to prove serious. Anti-tetanus serum was administered to prevent dangerous complications.

Young Hunter Dies of Wound

Clifford Taylor, 18, died in the hospital at Hopemont Tuesday morning of gunshot wounds received accidentally while hunting near Corinth on Monday. The youth received the full charge of a 12-gauge shotgun in the right leg, groin and abdomen, and had suffered from shock and loss of blood when taken to the sanitarium.

Taylor had been hunting with Herbert Wotring and had placed the butt of his gun against a stone when they stopped to rest. The gun slipped and was discharged. Wotring carried the unconscious hunter some distance toward a road, then becoming exhausted called for help and other hunters took the wounded youth to the hospital. The victim was a son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Taylor. He graduated from Terra Alta high in 1931 and had been prominent in music circles.

Home Economic Girls Aid Red Cross Society

One of the most interesting and useful projects in the home economics department of Oakland High this year has been the making of garments for Red Cross relief, by the Sophomore girls, under the supervision of Mrs. Eva Falkenstein Bishoff.

On November 21 they started to make dresses, slips and shirts. The garments were made by Ruby John-Jane White, Elizabeth Paulie, Ruth Shrout and Madeline Savedge. Material was furnished by Mrs. Paul Naylor, of the Red Cross. Nineteen garments were made in 117 hours, averaging fifteen hours for each person. The garments consisted of 8 outing cloth slips, five children's dresses, four tailored shirts for boys and two dresses for women.

As a result of the project the girls have had experience in making tailored shirts with flat seams and button holes and have learned how to operate a machine more efficiently.

MACHINE SHED DESTROYED BY BLAZE, LAST EVENING

Farm Implements and 21 Pigs of Dice Spiker Burned

Fire of undetermined origin completely destroyed the combination barn, machine shed and hog barn on the farm of Dice Spiker, three miles south of Oakland, about 8 o'clock last night. Loss was estimated at several thousand dollars, partially covered by insurance.

The frame structure was razed and twenty-one hogs were consumed. A new tractor, two old automobiles, a corn planter, a hay loader, a corn plow and other farm machinery were lost in the blaze.

The Oakland Fire company was summoned but no water was available to fight the flames. The building was practically consumed before the firemen arrived.

The blaze was not discovered until it had gained considerable headway, making it impossible to get out any of the machinery or the animals.

TWENTY-NINE DEER ARE EXHIBITED BY HUNTERS

Others Not Yet Reported—Will Equal Total of Last Year

With twenty-nine deer already reported killed during the three-day open season (last Thursday, Friday and Saturday), it was estimated that the number would equal that of last year when forty were bagged by hunters in the Garrett county forests.

The law requires that the killing of a deer must be reported to the State game warden at Baltimore. The game warden then notifies R. S. Browning, deputy game warden for this section. Each mail from Baltimore, Mr. Browning says, brings the names of an additional number of those who were successful in the hunt.

Numerous hunters scoured the hills and valleys on those three days and many narrow escapes have been reported both for the hunters and the deer. Practically all sections of the county had successful hunters.

The following have been reported so far: Norman L. Bittinger, Jennings; J. Frank Browning, Oakland; Walter N. Nedrow, Selbysport; Robert Rhodes, C. C. Mason, Ray Beckman, Swanton; Leonard Sweitzer, Abe King, Ray Smith, Daniel Sisler, Deer Park; Verlyn Carr, McHenry; Jerry Durst, Jennings; Truman Wilt, George Hummel, J. R. Gnagey, Sherman Davis, Lloyd Durst, Joshua Turner, Grantsville; Thos. Price, Frostburg; W. Scott Shreve, Jr., Oakland; Jacob Beitzell, Bittinger; John Reckart, Cranesville; Alvie DeWitt, Gilbert DeWitt, Sang Run.

Curtley Barnard, Swanton; J. S. Craig, Mt. Lake Park; Milton Edgar, McHenry; Charles Skipper, Oakland; S. B. Lowdermilk, Selbysport.

Several of the deer killed had ten points. A young deer was found dead by Fred. Livengood, Grantsville; and a 14-point buck was found dead by John Custer at a point on Meadow Mountain.

Most of the hunters of this section scoured the thick woods on both sides of the Youghiogheny River, north and west of Muddy Creek, Sang Run, the mountains in the vicinity of Grantsville and Swanton and Snaggy Mountain west of Oakland.

Buckhorn Hunters' Club Gets Two Deer

Members of the Buckhorn Hunting Club of Buckhorn Hollow, near Muddy Creek, concluded a successful deer season by killing two bucks of six and eight points respectively. The six point buck was killed by Alva DeWitt and the eight pointer by Gilbert DeWitt, both of Sang Run.

On Friday night the club celebrated its founding with music and a general good time.

This club claims to be the only hunting club in Garrett county to boast of a complete baseball team, a stringed band and a rifle team. The stringed band is known as the Sang Run Puddlejumpers.

The club, a year 'round outing organization, has as its officers and members, J. Alvin Friend, president; Clayton Wolfe, vice-president; Parker DeWitt, treasurer; members, Milton DeWitt, Stephen DeWitt, Gilbert DeWitt, Alva DeWitt, Robert DeWitt, George DeWitt, Everett Friend, Geo. Kramer, Ben Savage and the officers above.

The Republican, Garrett County's leading and best newspaper.

MARCHERS ARE ESCORTED THRU GARRETT COUNTY

Fifty-three Battered Trucks and Automobiles Brought Through Kitzmiller and Accident

HEAD TOWARD THE WEST

Fighting sleet and snow, a column of western "hunger marchers" in 53 battered trucks and automobiles, was escorted by police through the Garrett county mountains and headed toward Uniontown, Pa., late last night, while a number of vehicles were parked during the night along the roads leading from Winchester to Romney.

Sergt. A. M. Spioch, of the State Police, who was in charge of fifteen Maryland troopers in the escorting squadron, led the dilapidated motorcade from Romney to New Creek Junction, thence to the Kitzmiller road and on through to Accident and Keyser's Ridge, where the motley train headed westward on the National Highway.

A number of the cars and trucks continued over the Northwestern Turnpike toward Parkersburg, after leaving Romney last evening, while other machines were parked along the road at Hanging Rock and other points between Winchester, Romney and Red House. The demonstrators slept in the trucks and cars, while police guarded them.

More than fifty Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia police officers escorted the vehicles over the slippery roads. Most of the cars and trucks of the "hunger horde" will continue the westward journey this morning while a few will be repaired along the roads.

Marchers stopped enroute through Garrett county at various filling stations and garages and purchased gasoline and oil. More than 1,000 persons were in the machines, police estimated.

Each year since the organization of the band in 1927 an annual concert has been given. The entertainment will be held immediately following the evening services in the various Oakland churches.

A number of classical selections, including marches, overtures, waltzes, etc., under the direction of Mr. Brown, will be rendered.

For this occasion admission will be free and the public generally is invited.

Lawrence Fraley Heads Local Fire Company for 1933

Lawrence M. Fraley was elected president of the Oakland Volunteer Fire department at the regular meeting last night. Other officers elected were William R. Browning, vice-president; James Hart, secretary; W. W. Dawson, treasurer; Emroy Bolden, chief; Grover Stemple, assistant chief; Fred Peddicord, second assistant chief; Ernest Townshend, Sr., captain; George Kerins, Ralph Thayer and A. T. Shaw, the standing committee.

For the first time since the company has been organized a fire alarm was turned in during a meeting and in two minutes thirty-three firemen were enroute to the fire.

Secure Anderson Building for Rummage Sale

The Anderson building on Alder street, opposite the Court House, has been secured as a place to hold the rummage sale in the near future, being held under the auspices of the Oakland Civic Club in order to help the needy of the community.

The Civic Club members are asking that material for the sale be sent or brought to the building on Tuesdays or Fridays between three and five o'clock, or if this is not possible, the people are asked to notify a member of the Boy Scout troop who will see that it is delivered. All are urged to contribute for this good-will sale.

A Country Editor Looks at Life

By JOHN OLIVER EMMERICH
Publisher McComb (Mississippi) Enterprise.

He observes human nature without big-city veneer. He is a person—not a machine. He has the fun of crusading for his pet ideas.

Human nature parades itself across the experiences of a newspaperman. From close range he is privileged to observe the fluctuating emotions of the public. Like the tides of the sea, they ebb and flow.

The small town editor is particularly privileged in this respect. Newspapermen in other fields, however, may not agree that so-called country journalism affords broader avenues for studying human nature. My workshop is in a town of slightly over ten thousand population and the territory that surrounds it.

Recently I was talking with the city editor of a large metropolitan daily.

"I can't see," he said, 'where you can get a kick out of running a newspaper in a small town. Life there is too dull. No exitement. I've got to be where things are going on in a big way."

Well, I admit there's something exciting about the proportions of a metropolitan daily. One can say the same thing about a huge plant where automobiles are turned out in mass production. But is there anything especially exciting about tightening bolts, day in and day out, bolts located on the same place on every car body that comes down the line? The finished automobile is fine to look upon, but the efforts of so many individuals are consumed in its production that the result is a very impersonal thing. The workman cannot see himself in the product; he has merely tightened a bolt or covered a fender with paint.

The greater the newspaper, the greater is the need of specialization. Speialization means restriction and restriction means routine. When business becomes routine, then it becomes dull and unexciting.

I do not mean to say that the small town editor should pick up a copy of his paper and say, "This is what I have done." Most assuredly the small town paper is not a one-man task. But somehow the duties and responsibilities of the small town editor are so interwoven in his paper that it becomes a part of him. He writes news as well as editorials. Letters regarding subscriptions are frequently directed to him personally. He is charged personally with the mistakes of the paper and if an editorial happens to meet with happy accord the people will say, "Did you read what so-and-so had to say?" And many will stop the editor on the street to express approval or disagreement with an editorial viewpoint.

Pike county, Mississippi, for example, had expended approximately two million dollars of state, federal and county money over a period of twenty years in an effort to eradicate Texas cattle ticks. Farmers had been forced by law to dip their cattle at regular intervals. Vats were constructed at various places in the ounty and farmers had to go over the range, herd their cattle, drive them to the vat, and then force them to plunge in and take a bath in an arsenic solution.

With this program executed year in and year out, naturally farmers were rightfully irritated. Many vats were dynamited. Finally the state made a large appropriation to complete the job of eradicating ticks in the few remaining "ticky" counties. Within a few years the drive was successfully completed. The ticks were gone.

Pike county, however, borders the state of Louisiana and Louisiana had neglected tick eradication work and ticks were plentiful there. It was soon seen that Louisiana's "ticky" cattle crossing the Mississippi line would re-infest Pike county herds and thus destroy all the results of the tick eradication movement.

The county supervisors employed range riders but this was ineffectual for while a rider was at one end of a beat a stray Louisiana yearling could cross the line and distribute enough ticks to re-infest a whole community.

The county was placed under quarantine; cattle could not be sold. Farmer son the line were ordered to continue dipping. Discontent was rife.

A local newspaper suggested that the county build a double line fence between the states with mechanical cattle guards on all roads. A double fence, ten feet apart, was necessary as cattle could rub against each other and so distribute ticks if only a single fence were used. This, incidentally, substantiated the editorial position of the newspaper.

"Build a fence between two states to keep out ticky cattle." The idea was hailed as preposterous by the supervisors. A newspaper fight followed. "Politics," cried the press. "The supervisors want to maintain range riders for the patronage it affords."

The politicians retaliated. The editor was abused and condemned in open letters published by rival newspapers. The newspaper reasoned that the thirty miles of fence could be built for approximately the cost of range riders for one year. The fight was bitter. The editor took some of the politicians to task. One of the indirect results of this fight was that a prominent citizen, who felt that he had been outraged, called at the newspaper office with his gun, threatened to kill the editor on sight, demanded retraction, etc. A ten thousand dollar libel suit was filed—and subsequently abandoned.

Public opinion crystallized favorable to the fence idea. Subsequently the line fence was built. Farmers ceased driving their cattle to the dipping vats. The quarantine was lifted. The cattle market reopened. And the county was assured of permanent protection against cattle ticks.

Now the thing that makes an editorial fight particularly interesting to the small town editor is that he meets the people he opposes face to face every day. They know exactly where he is and can talk to him at almost any hour. He is not secluded in a skyscraper office behind a barricade of secretaries. The editorial policy therefore becomes more or less personal. The larger the newspaper, the more impersonal editorial campaigns seem to be. The greater the paper, the less conspicuous becomes the editor; and many small town editors often wish that they could fade out of the picture somewhat and let a campaign be regarded as a matter of newspaper policy rather than an opinion maintained by the editor of the paper.

It would seem to some people that if an editor were alert to the interest of the community and consistenly championed what he thought best, he would soon have an accumulation of enemies. Not so. That is, if the editor's stand was actuated by community interest, is fair to all concerned, and is sincere. Naturally if an editor were selfish, insincere and unfair, he would soon lose the respect of his readers as well as the friendship of his people.

The public is fickle, forgetful and forgiving. At heart people are good. Men opposed by an editor in a project today may next month be working diligently with him in the championship of another project.

There are hundreds of editors in small towns who have won the respect and esteem of their readers because of courageous editorials. Perhaps "courageous" is the wrong word. Championing things that are right is more a matter of 'conviction" than of "courage." An editor who has observed the reactions of human nature understands that the public will not permanently condemn a position that is sincere. Of course, the editor may temporarily have the majority against him. They may think of him in terms of fire and brimstone and they may talk loudly. But in the end the public will forget and forgive. That's why I say 'conviction." Perhaps the time when courage is needed is when the editor must differ with his friends. It is much easier any day to oppose enemies than friends.

A newspaper does not have to be militant in policy to sponsor an editorial policy that is aggressive. Every small town editor can find enough things about him to keep an editorial page constantly hot. And he need not be a crusader or a reformer. It just means that the problems in a small town are very personal to the people.

Of course every now and then an agitated subscriber will call at the newspaper office and demand that his subscription be stopped. Frankly, a reasonable number of cancellations should not make an editor feel badly. It proves that people read what he writes. It indicates backbone and signifies that the editor is not indulging in spineless fence straddling. A handful of disgruntled readers cannot injure a newspaper by merely cancelling their subscriptions. The chances are that the ex-subscriber will borrow the paper of his nearest neighbor and continue reading it. Queer as it seems, however, usually when a militant reader stops his paper he seems to think that cancellation will greatly injure the newspaper.

It is stimulating to observe the indications of pride, interest, vanity and good nature as revealed through the people who call at a small town newspaper office. Last winter was very mild. A subscriber had a few banana trees growing in his front yard for ornamental purposes, and in the middle of January a bunch of this tropical fruit ripened. To the newspaper office he came and presented it to the editor with his compliments. Always the farmer with his first cotton bloom of the season rushes to the newspaper office. The man with the first boll and the first bale does the same thing. It is not unusual for a farmer to bring in a large sweet potato to exhibit in the newspaper window.

Once a subscriber brought in a queer shaped hen egg. It resembled a human index finger, nail, joints, wrinkles, everything. At noon I took it home to show it to my family. I could not carry it in my hand while driving and was afraid to risk placing it on the car seat, so I put in my shirt pocket. My little boy greeted me with an effectionate hug. That was another case of humpty-dumpty had a great fall and I was forced to change shirts.

People who go fishing always return with extravagant fish stories. After all, no one expects a fisherman to tell the truth while relating his story. Almost invariably when these sportsmen return from a few days' outing they see the editor of their newspaper and spin their yarn. It is one of the greatest sources of fine humor.

The same relations between small town editors and their people is revealed in the serious things of the community. Check up on the progressive movements of small communities. It may he a strawberry festival, a spring style pageant, a cotton carnival, a chamber of commerce drive. It does not matter what the project may be or where the community is located, usually you will find that back of the project is the community's newspaper. Newspapers in small towns not only publish the births and deaths and intervening happenings of their people, but they are power stations as well. These stations supply a force that pushes communities forward.

People look to the small town editor for leadership. Rats broke into a lady's chicken house and killed 90 biddies. "You ought to get our town to put on a rat campaign," a lady's voice came over the telephone. A dog bites a child. Radio interference in a neighborhood. The traffic laws are not enforced. Dope peddlers are rampant. Always to the editor people come with these troubles. When asked to write a letter and sign it for publication regarding some pet annoyance, the complainers shirk deliberately. The editor must pull the chestnuts out of the fire. He is, in reality, the world's greatest "chestnut puller."

No profession has a monopoly on compensating values. Every branch of every calling, journalism in particular, has its compensations. They are to be found in the grind of the big city daily, but somehow I think the editor of the small town paper gets a greater share.

Once I overheard some men talking about the biggest "kick" they got out of life. One man said he preferred taking his chances with a liver spotted pup, a shot gun and a wild covey of birds in a corn field. Another said he got his biggest thrill in matching his wits against a green trout in a swift running mountain stream. May I testify that, outside of playing with my youngsters at night, my biggest kick in life is editing a small town newspaper. It is filled with thrills. It is exciting enough. Several thousand small town editors can testify to this fact.—Reprint from the December Rotarian Magazine.

THE HUNGRY MARCHERS—

The hungry marchers were not so hungry. When towns refused to give them food, they sent out agents who bought all that was necessary.

When the gasoline tank became empty and they were not able to command a filling station operator to fill it up free of charge, they handed over the cash.

The hunger marchers are nothing more than a bunch of Reds and Communists and any manner in which they are dealt with enroute to Washington, in Washington or enroute to their homes from Washington, will be too good for them.

The money spent by the leaders would keep the entire lot at home, where they belong. The hunger marchers deserve absolutely no sympathy, and at last the people are awakening. They aren't getting much.

THE NEW ERA OF ROAD BUILDING

Ohio recently completed 1800 miles of dustless, mudless farm-to-market roads at an average cost of but $2,000 a mile. Commenting on this, State Highway Director Merrell said: "The relationship of flattened public pocketbooks to the ever increasing need for new roads opens up a new era of road construction."

Like all other "commodities," roads have gone through constant evolution in this country. At the beginning of the automobile age, there were few highways that didn't tax the resources of even the horse and buggy. Then came the beginnings of the superhighways, costing untold thousands of dollars a mile. "Political" roads were built—splendid, high-priced arteries, traversing country which had no need of them. Millions of dollars of tax money were wasted in this way.

Now, Mr. Merrell says, we have come to a new era. We have learned that the cost of a road must be measured by the return it gives us—that it is as wasteful to build a $20,000 a mile road where a $2,000 a mile road would serve, as to build a low-cost road where traffic demands an artery that can withstand the constant passage of the heaviest vehicles. Science has given us materials and processes making possible the construction of first-class, weatherproof rural roads for very small sums.

States which are building low-cost roads, connecting farms and small towns with the outside world, are laying a foundation for the future. They are setting the stage for more profitable farming and for accelerated community development.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

The question of foreign debts and whether or not they will be paid continues to be the all-absorbing topic of the day. The propaganda for cancellation goes ahead in Europe and in certain high financial quarters in the United States. Up to this time there is no evidence that the propaganda is having any great effect among the chosen representatives of the American people in Congress. We are told that the British pound sterling is slumping toward zero because of the necessity for war debt payments; that nations will be forced into repudiation of their international debts with fatal effects on foreign credit and foreign trade; we are told that if the debt payments are continued the depression will continue and that cancellation will mean immediate prosperity.

But to each argument someone in favor of retaining the validity of these debts has found an answer. The financial writer of national reputation tells us that there is good reason to doubt the permanency of the recent slump in the British pound. He opines that it may have been in part manipulated by financial interests who want to put the worst possible phase on debt payments for the purpose of frightening America into cancellation. He adds that some of the slump is undoubtedly due to the short selling of the British money, and that when the covering comes, as it must, there is apt to be a rapid advance. He believes that if the payment is made much of the fog and furor will disappear, the pound will recover and business will go along as usual.

While it is possible that some of the smaller countries who owe us money and whose credit is none too good at any time, may be forced to repudiate their obligations, temporarily at least, there is apparent little fear that countries like Great Britain and France will use the remedy of repudiation. They have too much at stake in the way of national credit. Some financiers seem to be of the opinion that if any nations are threatening repudiation, the sooner they get to it, the better. The Commercial and Financial Chronicle said recently:

"If some countries should actually default in their war debt payments, that would not be half so unsettling as the constant agitation of the question with attendant uncertainties. The country now needs a rest, and should be spared from the constant injection of foreign issues in its daily affairs after having suffered so severely from these during the last eighteen months."

Some of the eastern seaboard financiers who think cancellation would be such an unmixed blessing are evidently out of touch with the people back in the states, and do not realize the state of public feeling. In this regard, it may be said, that cancellation of war debt payments would be followed not only by a protest, but by a demand for the scaling down or cancellation of private obligations in this country. There are many mortgages on many farms in America, because of which a great many farm owners now face disposession. Many of these will be unable to see why, if we can forgive Europe's debts, a little cancelling cannot be done at home in the interest of the American who owes money. The seabord financier would doubtless shudder at such a proposal as spelling the end of financial order, but let him not forget that cancelling the European debt would set a dangerous precedent, and one which might have repercussions in various parts of the country far different from the kind that might be ordinarily expected.

In view of Europe's present attitude, that the debts are purely political and that the allied nations are being harshly treated, it is interesting to note just what was said when these loans were being negotiated back in 1917. Then the pleas to the United States to aid were vehement and frantic. As the Washington Star recently stated: "Dispatches of Lord Balfour, British secretary of state for foreign affairs; Walter Hines Page, American ambassador to London; many other continental statesment, and Admiral W. S. Sims, show the pressure under which President Wilson and Secretary McAdoo of the Treasury sanctioned loans of approximately $4,000,000,000 that year to Great Britain, France, Italy, Russia, Belgium and Serbia.

"On June 28, 1917, Ambassador Page said: 'Financial disaster to all the European allies is imminent unless the United States government advances to the British enough money to pay for British purchases in the United States,' and added:

"'Unless we come to their rescue we are all in danger of disaster. Great Britain will have to abandon the gold standard.'"

BITTINGER

Many hunters, young and old, spent the first three days of the month on the nearby mountain ranges in quest of deer, but in this immediate neighborhood only two deer were killed, one by Jacob Beitzell and the other by some one unknown. The second animal was a doe and therefore protected by the law and was found near the top of Meadow Mountain by Edward Buckle soon after it was shot.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Frickey and children, of Grantsville, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Brenneman at their home here last Sunday.

The statement at the beginning of this letter to the effect that but two deer were killed in this neighborhood during the open season, was in error. Norman Bittinger was the third sucessful hunter, he having killed an eight-point buck on Friday near Low Gap.

Canning Meat Sundries

When properly prepared and processed all the edible meat sundries are wholesome, have a delicate flavor and make a pleasing change in the menu.

Liver paste is economical and easy to prepare. It is good for sandwiches in the lunch box or for hot toasted sandwiches for Sunday evening suppers. It may be used to stuff cabbage, for meat turnovers or as force meat balls to serve with roast chicken.

Liver Paste

Two and one-half pounds liver (beef or calves), 1 lb. fat (pork or beef), 2 teaspoons cinnamon, 6 tablespoons ground onion, 2 eggs, 1½ to 2 cups of milk, pepper and salt to taste, 9 crisp soda crackers. Remove membrane and skin and wash in cold water to remove blood. Slice and parboil for 5 minutes. Put liver and fat together and run thru food chopper, using the fine attachment. Mix seasonings and cracker crumbs and put them through food hopper a second time, using the nut butter attachment. Add eggs slightly beaten and enough milk to give right consistency. Mix thoroughly. Put in jars within 1½ inch of top and partially seal. Process for 70 minutes at 15 lbs. pressure or 3 hours in water bath.

KEEP YOUR COLD GERMS TO YOURSELF, IS ADVICE

Colds Are "Catching"—Health Directors Lists "Dont's"

"Colds are catching. If you are unlucky enough to have one, keep your germs to yourself. Have pity on the other fellow. Don't sneeze or cough in your neighbor's face. Sneeze or cough into your handkerchief, and use a paper napkin or one of some material that can be destroyed or burned," is the advice of Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the State Department of Health.

"Don't go visiting while you have a cold. Remember how uncomfortable you are and spare your friends from similar experiences. If circumstances make it necessary for you to 'keep a keepin' on,' observe the Golden Rule and treat others as you would be glad to have them treat you. Don't shake hands. You can follow the Chinese custom of shaking your own hands. Don't exchange pens or pencils, or any other things you have been carrying in your pockets, with others. Little children are particularly susceptible to colds. Protect them from your germs. Don't give a child a taste of something from off your plate. Don't kiss a child, or anybody for that matter, squarely in the mouth, at any time—cut out all kinds of kissing while you have a cold.

"We don't know much about the tiny organisms that cause these colds that give us so much trouble, except that they are so minute that they cannot be detected by the most powerful microscope. But we do know from personal experience what the germs do to us. And that is enough to put us on our guard against them. The laboratory workers have discovered that the cold producing germs are to be found in the excretions from the nose and throat of persons who have colds. Innumerable quantities of the germs are sprayed out into the air with every careless sneeze or cough. Some of this infectious material is deposited on the victim's hands and on everything he touches—cups, glasses, spoons, dishes, pipes, pencils. That is why doctors tell you to have your dishes and table utensils boiled before using a second time whenever you have a cold.

"The quickest way to get rid of a cold is to go home and go to bed if possible and to stay there until you are better and no longer a source of danger to others. Drink plenty of water; go on a light dict. If you ache all over and have any signs of fever, send for your doctor and follow his instructions."

Lesson for December 11

THE CHRISTIAN USE OF LEISURE

Nehemiah 8:9-18; Zechariah 8:4-5; Matthew 11:16-19; Mark 6:30-32; I Corinthians 10:23-33.

GOLDEN TEXT—Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God. I Cor. 10:31.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Watching Children Play.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Pleasing God in Our Games.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Best Way to Rest and Play.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Christian's Rest and Recreation.

The topic of today's lesson is rather a strange one to attempt to set to the texts selected by the lesson committee. By leisure is meant freedom from one's regular occupation. The instructed Christian gladly uses his leisure in the worship and service of God.

I. Hearing the Word of God Read (Neh. 8:9-18).

The people turned aside from their common luterests and demanded from Ezra, the scribe, the reading of God's word. The Mosaic economy provided regular periods for cessation from secular activities, such as the Sabbath, the Sabbatic Year and the Year of Jubilee, so as to afford recreation and spiritual refreshment to the people. In the case of these Jews, this period of reading of the Word of God meant not only physical refreshmeut, but spiritual revival.

1. Conviction of sin (v. 9). "The word of God is quick and powerful" (Heb. 4:12). It brings conviction of sin (Acts 2:37).

2. Weeping turned into joy (vv. (10-12). Forgiveness follows perception nnd confession of sin. When the sinner is forgiven, God would have him enter into joy. Continued mourning would not atone for sins that are past. "The joy of the Lord is your strength."

3. Blessing to be shared with others (vv. 10-12). True joy manifests itself in giving to others. Pure religion goes out to minister to the poor (James 1:27).

4. Obedience of the people. From the reading of the Scriptures they found the Feast of Tnhernacles had long been neglected. They kept the feast in a way that had not been known since the days of Joshua (v. 17).

II. Children Playing (Zech. 8:4-5).

Playing is natural to children. Zechariah pictures a time when the streets of Jerusalem shall be safe for the play of children. This will be realized when Jesus Christ reigns as king.

III. The Need of a Vacation (Mark 6:30-32).

The tragic death of John the Baptist had taken place, and the disciples had just returned from a strenuous missionary tour. Christ perceived their need nud invited them to come apart with him for a time of rest. It is a grave mistake to assume, becnuse we are engaged in the Lord's work and the need is so urgent, tiut a vacation can be dispensed with. Such periods nre needed in order that we may work again.

This retreat, called by Christ, was for the purpose of hearing a report of their work, to take counsel about the work, and to be refreshed by prayer.

IV. Do All Things for the Glory of God (1 Cor. 10:23-33).

The occasion for this teaching was the uncertainty as to the right attitude toward things sacrificed unto Idols. In mingling with society many perplexing questions arise such as, amusements, way of spending Sunday, way of spending a vacation, enjoyment of luxuries, etc. This portion of God's Word contains principles adequate for guidance in all of these matters.

1. "All things are lawful for me" (v. 23). This declaration is limited, of course, by things which are right in themselves. It is not true that a Christian is free to do things which are wrong in themselves. He can only indulge in lawful things as they are expedient and unto edification.

2. "Let no man seek his own" (v. 24). The Christian's law of life is unselfishness. The one dominated by love considers the other's interest rather than his own.

3. "Do all to the glory of God" (v. 31). This is the grand and supreme life of the Christian. In all our concerns we should have God's glory before us constantly. How could one ask God's blessing upon the intoxicating cup, dancing, gambling, theater going, Sunday desecration, etc.?

4. "Give no occasion for anyone to stumble" (v. 32). We should so live that no one can ever say that we have been the occasion for their downfall.

5. Follow the example of Jesus Christ (I Cor. 11:1). Christ gave up all for the sake of others.

He Is With Us

Wheresoever we be, whatsoever we are doing, in all our work, in our busy daily life, in all schemes and undertakings, in public trusts, and in private retreats, he is with us, and all we do is spread before him. Do it, then, as to the Lord.

Contrast

In the scientific and natural world, men obey no further than they understand; in the spiritual world they understand no further than they obey.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

Right out of a clear sky the thought hit me. I was all settled in my comfortable chair, ready for a quiet evening when into that dome of mine crept the realization that it was only sixteen shopping days until Christmas.

And when I thought of the increase l number of relatives since last Christmas and the amount we had fixed in the budget for us to spend, including the amount on ourselves, the world-wide depression had nothing on the way I felt. A bottomless pit would more suitably describe the shell hole I was in.

There's Mary, and, and Wash and Dick and Vic and Mac and Jen and Hack and Nick and Jack and Tort, to say nothing of nephews, nieces, in-laws, employes, close friends and other relatives too numerous to mention. In fact the entire list has to be revised.

For instance, there's Uncle Henry, who has a wad of dough and no children. Always he has received a purple tie or suspenders from me, and always I have received a card like the following:

"May sweet content with you abide Any place but by my side."

Although he likes me, I'll have to cut down on him this year. Nothing more than suspender buttons, if that. Liberal to the last. That's me.

Then there's Aunt Fanny, whose husband owns a large store in a good sized town. I always tried to treat her nice by sending an embroidered hanky with love and kisses, but all I ever got back was—

"Christmas is here! hey nonny, hey nanny!
Good luck to you, from your old Aunt Fanny.

I'll just have to cut off the hanky this year and send love and kisses. She might yet come through with part of the department store.

I never did rate a six percent return on my Christmas investment, even in good times, and this year it looks bad as far as the outgo is concerned. Last year, after spending $101.91, and sending out 162 Christmas cards, I received goods to the value of $72.69, 48 Christmas cards (10 of them received late), and 9 New Year's greeting cards.

If they were thoughtful last year and placed me on their mailing list, both as to presents and cards, I may yet come out ahead this year, especially since the local treasury has been depleted.

Then there's my brother-in-law. I always felt sorry for him the way he had to put up with me for so long and always spent as much for him as the price of a carton of cigarets, but this year it looks like a pack of them will have to suffice. The benedict's mite, if you want to term it that way.

No matter how small the budget, I just can't cut down on the Boss Editor's gift. He always gets cigars from me and then leaves the open box on his desk. You can't blame me, can you, if he leaves them there in plain sight?

My other relatives always fared pretty well. Silk bloomers to Cousin Lucy, a lot of ten cent store goods to my nephews and nieces, gum drops for gandpop and a nightcap for granny. But now the postoffice must suffer with me. I'm going to save the postage of Christmas packages and when the proper time comes just say the words through this column to relatives and local friends, and if they don't read this column and don't see it, then they're no friends of mine:

I'm sending you this little rhyme
Just because it's Christmas time.

I think of you just as of yore
But Papa Wolf is at the door.

So don't act like a bantam rooster
Because you won't get the things you useter.

The budget's got me, got me fast—
So Merry Christmas, this year, next and last.

A very contagious disease got started this week. Doctors have diagnosed it as Enlarged Rumor. It was rumored that Harvey Durst had his hat blown off by a gunshot one day, and his head blown off the next day. Neither is true, says Harvey.

Rumor had it that John Thayer had been shot with an army rifle. the bullet entering the left side of his body and coming out at the other side. Slightly exaggerated, to say the least.

I've often heard of the goose that laid the golden egg, but you'll have to ask Bet Dawson about the goose that laid grapefruit on the counter. Please don't ask me to explain.

Just staring out the window and thinking of the town of Oakland and how clean and beautiful it could be made to look, I noticed a second story man using a window as a wastebasket. Perhaps he thought the matter upon the paper was lighter than air and would float away. P. S. It did not.

Regardless of what I said first, Christmas is Christmas. I'll be buying things; you'll he buying things, and everybody will be buying. Just a little more careful than the year before, that's the difference. And have you made up with all your relatives, too?

Yout windows can be made to reflect the happiness within yout home by the use of an attractive arrangement of candles and lamps like this.

During the past three or four years some of your neighbors, and possibly you, have been getting and giving extra enjoyment at Christmas time through decorating, both inside and out, with multi-colored lights. Do it again this year.

Use your present equipment. But liven it up a little by adding something new here and there. Work up some new ideas. Your whole community will benefit from the cheer you spread. Christmas decoratives may now be bought anywhere at the lowest prices ever.

Bringing Cheer to the Needy

All over this country newspapers and other public as well as private agencies, are conducting clubs for the purpose of raising funds with which to cheer the hearts of thousands who otherwise would count Christmas but another dreary day.

Dwelling in a country rich in resources, greater than any other nation in te world, with grainaries and store houses bursting with last year's abundant crops, we can not understand nor realize that thousands of our fellows are without the bare necessities of life and that were it not for the sympathetic interest of state, nation and individuals, Christmas Day would be "as ships that pass in the night."

From the beginning of time thinkers have pondered over the mystery of the conflict between good and evil, right and wrong, poverty and riches, joy and sorrow, but without finding any satisfactory answer.

It is well nigh impossible for the hungry to have faith in the eternal fitness of things, for neither philosophy, well-meant advice nor theological theories will fill an empty stomach nor warm or cloth the body. But we call all do the best we can under the circumstances.

So-called "hunger machers" will not replenish the larder, pay the grocer, butcher or baker. They only add to the already overburdened welfare and charity organizations and make more difficult the consideration of the intricate problems looking to the re-establishment of normal conditions with which the government is now laboring.

The UnitedStates has untold wealth waiting for the successful blending of nature, individual and government forces into one harmonious whole. Until then we will have to adjust ourselves to changed conditions, pull our belts one notch tighter and do the best we can.

Camp No. 144, Woodmen of the World, Loch Lynn Heights, held its regular meeting last Monday evening at which time the following officers were elected:

Con. Com., D. B. Martin; Adv. Lieut., O. W. Bittinger; clerk, John W. Ream; banker, Joseph Turney; escort, E. H. Sterling; watchman, Bert Fahrenstine; board of managers, R. E. Bittinger, J. E. Callis, Clyde Calhoun.

The distributions of Christmas baskets to be sent out by this organization, was placed in the hands of a committee.

Hunting with a party of friends, Jack Craig bagged a fine 8-point buck the second day of the deer hunting season.

Mrs. Bushrod Grimes and daughter Miss Frances motored here from Morgantown Thursday and spent the day with friends and relatives.

Joseph Callis suffered a painful accident one day last week when an axe with which he was cutting wood slipped and cut his foot and leg quite severely.

Mrs. R. L. Cunningham and son Lawrence, of Fairmont, spent Wednesday with friends here. Mr. Cunningham was recently appointed deputy sheriff of Marion county, West Va.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Echard have returned to the Park from an extended visit with relatives in the west.

Jimmie Knight, Pete Jones and Geo. Morgan, all of Fairmont, returning from a hunting trip in Preston county, Tuesday, spent the evening in the Park with Mr. and Mrs. John O. Morgan.

Mrs. Frank Murphy was hostess at a bridge party at her home here on Monday night. The guests numbered twenty.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

It is always difficult to establish with certainty when and under what circumstances events that took place on this planet thousands of years ago, actually happened. However(there are certain contemporary writings which bear reliable testimony to the fact of every early translation of the Hebrew Scriptures into the Greek language, as early as 250 B. C. According to a document professing to be written by a Greek at the court of Ptolemy Philadelphus (B. C. 285-24) in Alexandria, and addressed to Philacrates, the celebrated Athenian, Demetrius Philarius induced King Philadelphus to have a Greek version made of the Jewish law books. The King, first having secured tht favor of the Jews by emancipating their countrymen who were slaves in Egypt, sent to Jerusalem an embassy in which Aristeas took part, to request the high priest to send him suitable men acquainted with both Hebrew and Greek, to make the translation. The high priest sent him the required men, seventy-two in all, six being selected from each tribe, with a Hebrew manuscript written in letters of gold. They completed the translation in seventy-two days, on the island of Pharos. Thereupon Demetrius called a convention of the Jews and read the version in their presence and in that of the translators. The translation met with universal favor.

The name of this translation is derived from its claim to have been the work of seventy or seventy-two translators.

The next statement respecting the Septuagint is from Aristobulus, a Jew of Alexandria of the second century before Christ, preserved in the writings of Eusebius. He states that the whole law was translated in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus and that Demetrius Philarius especially interested himself in the matter.

The next to bear testimony as to the origin of the Septuagint is Philo, the Alexandrian Jew. His testimony is important both on account of his locality and his profound learning. He states that Ptolemy Philadelphus sent ambassadors to the high priest and King of Judea—one man holding both offices—requesting him to send to him interpreters of the law. The Jewish high priest being delighted by this request, sent to the Egyptian king men of highest reputation for scholarship, who in addition to their Hebrew learning, had received training in the Greek classics. The translators executed their work on the Isle of Pharos. Philo further states that for decades afterward a feast and an assembly of the people was held annually on the island of Pharos, not only of Jews, but multitudes of other people, who sail thither honoring the place where the translation was made.

Scholars tell us that the Greek of this version is the common dialect that prevailed from the time of Alexander the Great. This translation had great authority in the early Christian church and some of the fathers regarded it as inspired. Its authority and use at the time of Christ was shown from the frequent quoting of it by the New Testament writers.

GRANTSVILLE

Fire Destroys Store Building

A fire, starting in an upstairs room of the store building of Arthur Resh, two miles south of Grantsville, burned the building and all its contents, including the eash register and account register. Mr. Resh did not discover the fire until it had gained such a start that it was impossible to move anything. A small work shop and his dwelling were saved due to the efforts of the Grantsville Fire company and neighbors who responded to the call. Mr. Resh's loss will be heavy as he carried a general line of goods. The loss was partially covered by insurance.

Residents Do A-Hunting Go

A large number of hunters took advantage of the three day open season on deer. Quite a hit of excitement prevailed in the chase but there were no fatalities. However, Harvey Durst had the exciting experience of having a bullet from a high powered rifle pass through the crown of his cap.

Those who were successful in getting deer are J. R. Gnagey, an eight pointer, George Hummel, a ten prong; Jerry Durst, Tom Price, Lloyd Durst and Sherman Davis.

Fred Livengood found a young deer and John Custer found a fourteen point buck, both of which had been shot and which had died.

Hunger Marchers Pass Through

Their passage was orderly. Some local people feared more or less trouble but the group was quite orderly. Stragglers have been traveling eastward since then.

BLAME STATE AND CHURCH FOR ACTS OF BLUE BEARD

Presbytery Says Lax Marriage Laws Made Killings Possible—To Ask For Stricter Statutes

REV. BROCK ON COMMITTEE

The State, church and every citizen of Maryland were accessory to the crime of William E. Powers, the so-called Blubeard of Clarksburg, West Va., it is contended in a report on Maryland marriage laws presented by Rev. Walter B. Brock, of Oakland, and Dr. Hugh Lenox Hodge, of Baltimore, before the Presbytery of Baltimore on Tuesday afternoon

"One of the most shocking crimes in recent times was the wholesale butchery by William E Powers, notorious Bluebeard, of Clarksburg, W. Va., of various widows and their children, attracted through matrimonial bureaus and murdered for the purpose of obtaining their property," the report said.

State Is Indicted

"Mr. Powers' final matrimonial adventure was solemnized with the blessing of the church in the town of Oakland, Md. The State of Maryland, in our opinion, and, we believe, in the judgment of God, stands as accessory to this crime, by making it possible for persons to enter the State, obtain a marriage license from the Clerk of the Circuit Court of any county on the basis of no other information or misinformation than that which one of the parties may be pleased to present and be married within ten minutes hy any clergyman.

"The church is also accessory to this crime by allowing such a state of affairs to exist without energetic protest. And every citizen of Maryland, whose indifference, or, in some instances, whose cupidity condones this condition, is an accomplice to the crime.

Says Other Tragedies Exist

"This is the most publicized tragedy that may be laid to laxness of the Maryland system of granting marriage licenses. But it is not the only tragedy. On the contrary, we believe that scarcely a day passes that does not record the consummation of an unwise or illegal marriage in the State of Maryland, entailing a life of suffering and sorrow for some person and perhaps for several persons, that would have been prevented by more intelligent laws more intelligently administered."

The reports made by Dr. Hodge as chairman of a special committee appointed to study Maryland marriage laws was received and adopted by the Presbytery at the morning session.

To Urge Law Change

In the afternoon the Presbytery adopted resolutions urging the Maryland Legislature to consider revision of the marriage laws so as to require the expiration of seventy-two hours from the time of making application for a marriage license to the delivering of the license to the applicant. It was left to the committee, of which Dr. Hodge is chairman, and Rev. W. B. Brock a member, to carry out the provisions of the resolutions, by seeing that the resolution was presented to the Legislature.

The resolutions suggest that provision be made in the law for the judge of a court to waive the time provision at his discretion and in such cases issue a license immediately.

The report read by Dr. Hodge also expressed the belief that "reform of marriage laws and practices is the only intelligent and effective method of refoming the divorce scandal of America."

Originate With Clerk

"Many divorce actions really begin when the county clerk issues the marriage license," the report continued. "The county clerk himself, if he knew the real facts in the case—viz., heredity, insanity, diseases, perjured misstatements of age or residence or race—would realize that such a marriage would never endure and ought never to be entered into in the first instance.

"The proverbial ounce of prevention would be infinitely more effective and certainly much more humane than many pounds of stricter divorce laws. Aud surely the pulpit has little right to condemn the individual guilty parties as long as the pulpit has nothing to say about the indefensible conditions which make possible these do-

OAKLAND FIVE NOSED OUT BY LONACONING 34 TO 33

Field Goal in Last Seconds Gives Goodwill Firemen 1-Point Victory

A field goal a few seconds before the final whistle enabled the Goodwill fire company quintet of Lonaconing to come from behind and nose out the Oakland Firemen by a score of 34 to 33 in an exciting game played at the firemen's armony, Lonaconing, on December 11. It was the first defeat in five games played this season for the Oakland quint, and the third time in succession that Lonaconing has won by a one-point margin. Two games last year went into extra periods, Coney winning both tilts by one point.

The game was closely contested throughout, not more than four points separating the teams at any time. At half time Oakland led by two points, 18 to 16, and at the end of the third quarter was still leading 27 to 26. A spurt in the final frame gave Coney a lead of 30 to 27, but Oakland put on a rally and was leading 33 to 32 until just before the final whistle, when Turnbull shot a field goal. It was the opening game of the season for Lonaconing.

Ray Eichorn and Thompson were the main point getters for Lonaconing with six and five field goals respectively, while McComas led the Oakland team, scoring with six double deckers.

A return game will be played in Oakland on Wednesday, December 28.

The lineup and summary:

Oakland—33		Lonaconing—32
Graves	F	Boyd
Pollock	F	Thompson
McComas	C	Wilson
Hanst	G	J. Eichorn
May	G	Turnbull

Substitutes—Lonaconing, R. Eichorn, Glynn; Oakland, Nally, Rice.

Field goals—Boyd 2, Thompson 5, Wilson 2, Turnbull 2, R. Eichorn 6, Graves 3, Pollock 2, McComas 6, May 1, Hanst 1, Nally 1, Ricc 1.

Fouls—Thompson 0-2; Graves 1-2; Pollock 1-1; McComas 1-1; Hanst 0-1; May 0-1; Nally 0-2.

Oakland Defeats Aurora

Oakland defeated Aurora in a return game on the local floor on Friday night, 36 to 29, after having won at Aurora 41 to 34 a week previous.

Aurora led at half time 14 to 12, but was unable to maintain the lead throughout the remainder of the tilt.

McComas led the Oakland scoring with seven field goals; Hanst got four, Pollock and Graves three each, and May 1. Enoch led the visitors with six field goals while Parrish got 3, Wotring 2 and Wiles 1.

To Play Parsons Friday

The Fire Department team will play the Parsons Firemen in the Oakland High gymnasium on Friday evening. The game will be called at 8:15 and there will probably be a preliminary game also.

Historic Nuts Available

Several hundred historic nuts for planting in honor of the 200th anniversary of the birth of George Washington, are still available, Miss Lottie Loar, president of the Oakland Civic club, stated.

These nuts are from the historic sites around Gettysburg. There are also some historic nuts from Mt. Vernon, which will be given out to those desiring to plant them for 1932 babies. These are to be distributed throughout the entire county and may be had by asking a member of the Oakland Civic club.

This afternoon in the auditorium of Oakland High School pictures will be shown of the activities at Hood College, following which the alumnae of that school will attend a tea at the home of Mrs. S. Townshend Naylor on Alder street.

CONTACT TOUR OF MINING REGIONS MADE YESTERDAY

Cooperation Between Maryland Industries Urged at Dinner in Cumberland Tuesday Night

30 BALTIMOREANS ATTEND

Approximately 35 representatives of Baltimore industries and public institutions were in Allegany and Garrett counties Tuesday and yesterday in an effort to bring about a greater consumption of Maryland mined coal.

In the nature of a business and inspection trip, the journey was arranged by the Maryland development section of the Baltimore Association of Commerce and a special committee of Western Maryland mine operators and business interests.

At a banquet held in Cumberland Tuesday night, "Maryland Coal for Marylanders" was the chief topic discussed with Thomas B. Finan, of Cumberland, referring to the coal industry in Allegany and Garrett counties and the trouble today in conducting the same.

The principal address was made by G. H. Ponder, Baltimore, who urged cooperation between Baltimore City and Western Maryland in the coal industry. The bulk of the talks centered around stabilizing the coal industry within the State of Maryland, emphasizing the purpose of the trip which is consumption of Maryland-mined coal.

Yesterday, on the inspection tour, the train stopped at Blaine, on the Western Maryland Railway, where the Baltimore guests were divided, one group to visit Manor Coal Company's washer at Vindex; the Wolf Den mine of Shallmar Mining Corpration at Shallmar, and also operations of the Hamill Coal and Coke Company at Blaine.

A stop was also made at Gorman to inspect the mine operations of the Georgian Coal Mining Company, and at Kempton for an inspection of the mine of the Davis Coal and Coke Company.

Corporal Thomas Currie, of the State Police, was the official escort of the party throughout the tour of the mines in the Kitzmiller and Shallmar sections.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Arnold Falls Asleep in Car and Is Covered With Blanket

FUNERAL HELD TUESDAY

Evelyn Virginia, the 20-months' old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Arnold, of Sunnyside, was found dead in the family automobile, the cause of death being attributed to monoxide gas fumes.

Mr. Arnold with Mrs. Arnold and their three children were enroute to Underwood from their home, traveling in an open car. The children sat on the floor of the automobile in order to protect themselves from the cold, when the younger one of the three, Evelyn, fell asleep. She was covered with a blanket to make her more comfortable and at the Sunnyside Grange Hall Mr. and Mrs. Arnold stopped for a few minutes, the children remaining in the car with the motor still running. When they arrived at the Sims home in Underwood, whom they had set out to visit, they found the child had succumbed to the fumes of the escaping gas.

Funeral services were conducted at Red House Lutheran church Tuesday afternoon, Rev. A. K. Jones officiating, with interment in the Fike lot in Union cemetery at Gortner. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold have two other daughters, Leah and Laura Ellen, and two sons, Clayton and Franklin.

ARROWHEAD EMBEDDED IN TREE RECALLS INDIAN DAYS

Memories of three hundred years ago when Indians with their bows and flint-tipped arrows roamed Garrett county and the country hereabouts, were brought to the people of the Gortner community last week-end when Albert Sisk found an Indian arrowhead imbedded in a piece of timber which he was using.

Judging from the size of the tree, a white oak, and the number of rings in the wood, it is roughly estimated that more than three hundred years have elapsed since the arrowhead found its mark in the then sapling, the tree since that time having continued to grow and envelop it within the grain.

The lumber being used by Mr. Sisk came from a white oak tree on the farm of Samuel Slabach. When cut down some ten or twelve years ago the tree was some four feet in diameter and had more than 425 rings. It was sawed into pieces 6x6 inches, and last Friday Mr. Sisk was using one of the pieces cut nearest the heart of the tree. While attempting to bore a hole through it his bit struck a hard substance and upon examination the arrowhead of flint was extracted.

The location of the arrowhead was 360 rings from the outside of the tree, making it about the year 1572 when some Indian, on a hunting jaunt, missed his deer, or his enemy's scalp, or what have you.

First Real Winter Weather Hits Oakland and Garrett County

Practically all the elements of nature combined on Saturday and Sunday to give Oakland and the entire county their first taste of real winter. Snow to the depth of two inches fell early Saturday morning and this was later followed by rain, sleet and a biting wind which rendered highways and sidewalks unsafe for travel.

Snowplows kept the roads open but the machines were unable to clear away the ice and sleet. Cinders on all dangerous curves kept the hazards of traffic at a minimum.

In some parts of the county fog added to the general bad weather conditions which were widespread over the United States. The temperature was several degrees below freezing.

The storm in continuing throughout the week has added several inches of snow, the thermometer in the meantime dropping several degrees.

Lonnie David McNemar, 21, of near Deer Park, was instantly killed and his body mangled beyond recognition yesterday afternoon about 1:40 when he attempted to board a moving eastbound freight train as it was passing through the village of Deer Park. Lesson for December 18

REVIEW: CHRISTIAN STANDARDS OF LIFE

GOLDEN TEXT—And he said to them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.—Luke 9:23.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Holiday with Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—How God Orders Us to Live.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Following Christ in Everything.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Ideals of the True Christian.

The best method of review for young people and adults will be to discover the principal teaching of each lesson. This teaching may be set forth as a kind of a motto for the life. A good plan will be to make assignments to the members of the class a week in advance. The passages of Scripture are so diversified that a great variety of opinions will doubtless be obtained. The following suggestions are offered:

Lesson for October 2.

The Christian's growth is by means of his devotional life. His understanding and heart-life should be symmetrically developed. Bible study and prayer go hand in hand. The neglect of either means stunted growth.

Lesson for October 9.

The look into the Bethany home is not to see how Jesus behaved therein, but to see the behavior of the members of that home. The most important lesson is that we should sit at Jesus' feet in the days when all is well, that in the time of sickness and death we, like Mary, may know how to act. We should choose that good part which cannot be taken away.

Lesson for October 16.

The child of today will be the homemaker of tomorrow. It is most important that children be trained for God by instruction in God's Word.

Lesson for October 23.

The divine unit of society is the home. The welfare of its members depends upon their being united to serve the Lord. This union includes the father, the mother, and the children.

Lesson for October 30.

The believer is a citizen as well as a Christian. The instructed Christian will be loyal to the state as well as to the church.

Lesson for November 6.

World peace will come, not through conferences, leagues, and understandings, but through the appearing of the Prince of Peace and the establishment of the Messianic Kingdom. Only then will the "Will of God be done on earth as it is in heaven."

Lesson for November 13.

The all-important thing in life is not making a living but a life. Man's thought and effort should be to shape his life for the life which is to come and not to accumulate the things of the earth which must be left behind at death.

Lesson for November 20.

Wealth is from God. The natural resources from which wealth is gained were prepared by God. Even the ability to seize them and transform them into useful commodities is from God. Every believer should regularly and systematically give of his possessions to God.

Lesson for November 27.

Stewardship of life means the recognition that our very being with all its faculties and powers is a gift of God and that our powers were given for a definite purpose and that God will hold us responsible for their use.

Lesson for December 4.

In order to live in peace with members of other races, one must realize that God has made of one blood all the nations of the earth. In this light, racial supremacy will vanish.

Lesson for December 11.

The Christian's leisure time should be given to hearing the Word of God and to doing good in Christ's name.

His Dying Eyes

"His orderly found him alone and dying. The officer asked the soldier if he thought he could say a prayer. "That isn't in my line, sir," said the man; and then, with a sudden thought, he said, "But I have got a little cross my mother gave me; will that help you, sir?" The officer took the cross, and lifting it before him, murmured, "Hold Thou thy cross before my dying eyes," and died."

Blessings

In every duty every happiness, God sends us some sacrifice—some offering is required. If he sends riches, they are weighted with responsibilities; if he sends loving parents, they will need care and gratitude when the trail of old age draws on; if he sends unbroken, unclouded days of happiness, there is the gift of sympathy for others not so blessed.

Personal Service

Many young people are stingy in the giving of personal service, either to the society or to the church. They are willing, perhaps, to do the easy and pleasnat things but reluctant to undertake tasks that require time and thought and effort. What Sunday school is not in need of young men for teachers of the boys' classes? To teach such a class demands study and interest in the boys and work in their behalf.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

Last night was my night with rubbing alcohol and liniment and today is not my day of rejoicing. Not soon again will I be inveigled from my nice warm fireplace to go sledriding. And not soon again will they catch me unawares with no alibi to save me from downfall.

It all happened very unexpectedly. We were excited over an active game of chess when a look out of the window at the beautiful moon, the beautiful trees, the beautiful snow, and the beautiful panorama were too much to grasp in one breath.

"Let's go sledriding," was suggested and also my acceptance taken for granted. So preparations began. First a borrowed sled. No galoshes to be found. Earmuffs out of date and no toboggan handy. Missing fingered gloves and my good topcoat completed the costume.

Out we go, just kids again. Nothing but the highest hill will suffice, for you see that's the way we used to do it, and the highest hill has a sharp turn at the bottom, near a barbed wire fence. You know the type. In fact the picture is complete with the exception of the end of the first trip.

The old confidence is lacking. The old hill looks steep, but I wouldn't let anybody see how nervous I am. Game to the last, that's my story and I'll stick to it. And we won't go sitting up either. It's "belly-smacker" or nothing. One push and away we go.

Stop dragging your feet, take your knee out of my back, and this is no time for backseat driving. The right runner seems wobbly. Maybe I should never have started without getting the shackle bolts fixed. An electric reducer has nothing on this method of massaging the stomach muscles. Where is the bottom of that hill? There it is just over the next bump. There goes the runner. Drag your feet, fall off, lean, and look out for the fence. It's too late. Now, look at that good coat, to say nothing of all my Charley Horses, strained ligaments and wet feet. Where are my ears? And thus back to the fireside where belongs the man who "ain't so young as he useter was."

When this experience wears off, I shall probably try skiing next. I've heard it was good for lumbago.

After reading this over for censorship the wife says I am wrong—that I was the one who suggested going sledriding.

Oh, well!

Message From Santa
North Pole,
December 15,

Dear Scoop.-

I want to tell every person in Garrett county something, and since I know that everybody reads your column I will tell it to you and you can reprint it in the leading newspaper of the county.

Tell them I am getting sick and tired of filling up stockings that would stand alone if thrown in a corner, especially the people around Oakland. With a water supply such as Oakland has, there is absolutely no excuse for it. My sled is alwayys so filled with toys that I am compelled to leave my gas mask at home, and I am not going to stand for it this year. I had Christmas come on Sunday this year so that all socks could be included in the Saturday night bath.

And another thing. Tell Mayor Stemple and all the others, (I have their names written in my book) that the practice of hanging up stockings such as were obtained from the fat lady at the fair, will not be tolerated. Little gifts for little people, is my motto, and if they persist in trying to deceive me by hanging up the fat lady's stockings or the clothes bag, they will get nothing but switches, and Scoop, you have my consent to do the switching.

I have received many letters from people of your community including Turk Shartzer, Betty Dawson, Slim Shaw, Neil Fraley, and Archibaldson. They must expect to distribute presents all over the county, judging from their lists.

What would really save me a lot of trouble would be for people to give The Republican as a Christmas present, and then I wouldn't have to make so many trips back here to the North Pole.

Tell all the boys and girls who read your column to look for me soon. It won't hurt them to look.

Yours in Snow and Ice,
Santa Claus.

Fame has crowded this column at last. Recently a boy was born in this town and named Benjamin Earl, and they call it Scoop for short.

* * *

I am now in the process of finding out that I don't have to collect bills. They just accumulate.

A Long Wait

My grandpa notes the world's worn cogs and says we're going to the dogs.
His grand dad in his house of logs, swore things were going to the dogs.
His dad among the Flemish bogs,
vowed things were going to the dogs.
But this is what I wish to state:
The dogs have had an awful wait.

If you read this Thursday afternoon at 5 o'clock it will be just 223 hours until Christmas, or 13,380 minutes, or a mere 802,800 seconds. Better get ready to spread the Christmas cheer.

FARMS IN FLAMES—

Every fifteen minutes a farm goes up in flames. Every year $200,000,000 worth of farm property is destroyed by fire. Worst of all, every year 3,500 lives are lost in the blazing ruins of farm homes and barns. While you are reading this, a fine farm, with its buildings, its stock, its crop and perhaps even its human occupants is in the process of destruction.

In farm communities the need of fire prevention and fire protection are even greater than in the cities. Various organizations have published information telling the farmer how to eliminate, to the greatest possible degree, the chance of a fire occurring and others have told of the value of a good water supply in overcoming fires once they are started.

A large percentage of farm fire loss can be prevented and the bulk of the loss from unpreventable fires can be eliminated by immediate fire protection. Agriculture cannot afford its prsent annual fire waste.

NEW TAXES COMING

One of the glittering promises in the recent campaign which led to the change of administration was one to reduce taxes and cut down the machinery of government and its interference in business. But now that the smoke of battle is cleared away it is becoming evident that instead of reducing taxes, there will have to be new levies to balance the budget. Not only is this to be done, but there are to be new forms of taxation One of these proposed is the tax on chain stores within the District of Columbia, over which Congress has direct jurisdiction. The bill was introduced in the last House of Representatives by Congressman Celler, of New York, and sent to committee for study. It is reported that an effort is now to be made to get the bill out on the floor of the House without further delay. It is said that the bill would raise a half million dollars a year revenue from the chain stores in the District of Columbia.

Congress of course has nothing to do with state legislation. Many of the states have already passed laws taxing chain stores and it is reported that others will resort to the same kind of legislation during this winter.

The above example of special tax legislation is cited without argument as to its merits only to show that the tendency in Congress as well as the states is still to find new sources of taxation rather than to cut down the expenses of government and so lessen the tax burdens of the real property owner and the consumer who finally pay it all either directly or indirectly. Of course Congress will have to raise more money now to balance the budget but we ought never lose sight of the fact in our national and local affairs that what we need to restore prosperity is not the raising of more money to spend through taxation but in cutting down our public expenditures by a strict system of economy.

WENT FOOLISH WITH OUR MONEY

We need all of the modern improvements, for we have become accustomed to them and the Creator intended we should by our own initiative create these comforts out of the great abundance of raw materials He has endowed us with—more than enough for all.

The younger generation, not realizing what a struggle their parents and grandparents and the founders of this great nation had to face and conquer, cannot appreciate what these luxuries and comforts mean as we older ones do.

The trouble is that we have been so blessed in this nation with abundance of natural resources that we have made money our god and business our king. In doing this we have neglected our home life

Since the World War everyone has made more money than he dreamed of before All have been trying to "keep up with Lizzie" and most trying to outdo her This wild orgy of spending kept up until 1929. Then the great crash came. We are only paying the price nature demands of those who waste the abundance she has given them by violating her laws. The law of compensation never fails.

But this will all pass, for we never have a period of coherence following. Prosperity will return and we shall all be better for our experience. If it has taught us that the simple life is best and all really great people have lived it (which made them great), that the home is the foundation of a successful and great nation, and that real happiness comes from within instead of from without, the depression will be worth all that it has cost.

MR. GARNER'S LEADERSHIP

The leadership of Speaker Garner, of the House of Representatives, and Vice-President elect, met its first upset very shortly after Congress convened, when the House by a narrow margin of six votes turned down the prepared reslution for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. The vote was so close that many friends of the resolution are naturally wondering whether it might not have been possible to gather in enough votes to have put it over, had a more diplomatic precedure been followed.

The Garner prohibition repeal resolution was introduced as soon as Congress convened. Debate was limited to forty minutes by the Speaker's invoking the drastic procedure of suspending the rules so bringing the resolution to an immediate vote. The offering of amendments was not permitted, probably through fear that some sort of amendment might be adopted in line with the recent Republican platform, although the House is in itself controlled by the Democrats.

Several days before Congress convened Speaker Garner was quoted as stating that the repeal resolution would be put through the House as soon as it convened and he did not change his opinion, according to press reports even up to the time the voting commenced Just why Mr. Garner determined on such rapid and drastic action in attempting to put through the resolution is not known. During the recent campaign Mr. Garner for some reason or other was kept in leash by the Democratic Board of Strategy. Perhaps, as soon as he was unleashed, he determined to show the country that he could be a real boss instead of a subdued statesman, if he chose to be. But he will have to try again.

In the meantime although there is a great deal of outcry among the friends of the repeal resolution against the "lame ducks" in Congress there is private admission that Mr. Garner's leadership seems to be no more successful than it was in the preceding session. This especially in view of the fact that a great deal of the bitter opposition to the resolution came from Southern Democratic members of Congress.

Mr. Garner has been unhorsed in his first joust. It remains to be seen whether he can do any better when he gets in the Senate saddle. The record so far is against him. As a leader of the wets he has proven to be no Sir Galahad.

IN DAYS OF OLD

FORTY YEARS AGO

A uniform rank, Knights of Pythias, was being instituted in Oakland in connection with the lodge of that order.

A large wildcat was shot near Oakland by James H. Painter and being at the railway station when a westbound passenger train pulled in, the passengers unloaded in great numbers to see the animal.

The Fort Pendleton Hotel, located on top of the mountain overlooking Gormania, West Va., was burned to the ground. Most of the furniture was saved and the building was fully Insured. The hotel was under the management of Mrs. James A. Bayard, who was a daughter-in-law of Secretary Thomas F. Bayard, a member of President Cleveland's cabinet.

The Virginia cottage, under the management of Mrs. E. M. Bourchier, was opened to the traveling public.

Captain James A. Hayden and J. Howard Eckles prepared to erect a store building in the Park where they were to engage in the general merchandising business.

The Swanton Literary Society was organized and elected L. H. Friend, president Other officers were J. G. Friend, Miss Minnie Chisholm, Martha Friend, J. D. Ashenfelter, John B. Friend and Miss Cora Ashenfelter.

TWENTY YEARS AGO

The condition of the weather was such following November first as to render all kinds of outdoor work possible. The thermometer registered about seventy above zero at times, the roads were dusty and woodsferns and other plants were green.

Wild cats being so numerous In the Bond community the Brady Brothers were unable to get men to work the night shift. George Brown, a noted hunter in his day was sent for and he and Sandy Nightingale, in less than a week killed 27 wildcats, 9 foxes, 127 squirrels and a few pheasants.

The contract for four and one-half miles of new road from McHenry toward Accident was awarded.

The local postoffice, requiring additional floor space, moved into a larger room In the First National Bank Building, entrance being provided on Second street instead of on Alder street.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

Our New England citizens are notedly self-reliant and thrifty. They can usually get along, prosperity or no prosperity, although, of course, like the rest of us, they prefer the easier financial times. But some of the news coming out of the northeast today is not so reassuring, especially so far as our fishing industry is concerned. Hardy New England fisherfolk are famed in song and story. They are supposed to go out in all kinds of weather under all sorts of conditions, and they generally do. But now something has arisen with which they are unable to cope. They may be able to defeat the elements, but they are now up against grim economic law.

Here is the trouble, as diagnosed by the sound and logical Boston Transcript:

"The tariff bill is the fisherman's ally, but its efficiency is neutralized by low foreign currencies and gives for less protection than when the gold standard was in command of the exchanges of the world. By the slump in foreign money values, the enormous drop in wages abroad and the resultant scaling of the tariff wall, the foreign fishermen are able to give the American fishermen too hard a run for their money.

"For instance, Maine sardine factories have closed and the fishermen have put up their boats There was nothing else for them to do. Some of them may be on the relief lists in Maine. Norway is taking the sardine business away from them with a sardine that is so cheap that the Maine producers cannot hold the market. About two years ago Norway was exporting 380,000 cases of sardines to the United States, and Maine was producing 1,200,000 cases at that time. Today these figures are reversed, for Norway is sending about 1,400,000 cases this year and Maine will offer only 300,000 cases, according to Edward H. Cooley, director of the Massachusetts Fisheries' Association."

So it is not only the manufacturer and the grower who is suffering because of depreciated currencies over the sea. The new economic situation is giving plenty of trouble to our fisherfolk, too. And it is not only the sardine industry which is affected. As the Transcript points out, the Japanese salmon industry is ruining that same industry in the United States because our tariff is not sufficiently protective against low wages and depreciated currency. Continuing the Transcript says:

"A dollar buys so much salmon in Japan today that it becomes relatively unprofitable, if not wasteful, for the American merchant to spend that dollar for American salmon In fact, he cannot handle the American salmon in connection with what comes from Japan and bid for the common trade. If the Japanese currency were on a par with that of the United States a case of her salmon would cost 80 cents; but since the fall from the gold standard the yen has become so low in value that it takes only about 36 cents to pay for it, and the duty, being an ad valorem duty, adds only a few cents, bringing the Japanese salmon up to about 44 cents to compete with the American product which comes to about $1.00. The scallops sold in Boston today bring $1.75 to $2 a gallon, wholesale, while Japan captures the Pacific coast trade with her $1.25 product."

Here is something for Congress to think about. Instead of needing to have our tariff schedules reduced in an effort to increase foreign trade, it is evident that some of the schedules ought to be increased to protect our own industries against cheap currency effects in Europe and Asia. This cannot be done by negotiating tariff and trade agreements with various countries. That method would be far too slow and too clumsy, requiring as it would the sanction of two-thirds of the members of the United States Senate. What our industries which are being seriously crippled by debased currency and resulting starvation wages abroad, now need is some direct action which will protect our own producers. Here is one time when we are confronted both by a theory and a condition which dovetail. The theory is that debased currency lowers wages and living standards, and permits the producer in that country to undersell the producer in the nation which has sound, stable money. The condition is increasing unemployment in certain key industries of America, and it is a condition which ought to be remedied at once.

BLAME STATE AND CHURCH FOR ACT OF BLUEBEARD

Called Hypocrisy

"Surely it is fundamental hypocrisy for the church to pronounce whom God had joined together, upon a man-made union of those whom God hath not joined together. But we feel no Christian minister can evade some share of responsibility for such unfortunate unions simply by refusing to officiate. As long as we make no effort to change the system that encourages these unhappy events, we are guilty of connivance at its existence.

"One morning a young man, from across the State line, a member of a Presbyterian church, accompanied by a young lady and a friend, came to me," Rev. Brock continued in his report, "armed with a marriage license, to be married. 'Haven't you been drinking?' I asked. 'No,' he replied, 'not since I left home.' The man was obviously intoxicated and I refused to perform the ceremony, so they went on and were married by the professional 'marrying parson' of the town. But I do not feel that I succeeded in washing my hands of all responsibility in that case. A stain of guilt remains. In fact none of our hands will be perfectly clean until we have remedied the situation.

"In New England, where the first five-day interval has been in force for many years, experience has shown that many people who apply for a marriage license reconsider their purpose and do not return to receive the license. Parents of runaway girls and social welfare workers who know that one of the candidates is already married or suffers some other serious disability, are able to get in touch with the issuing authorities and prevent the granting of the license."

"Any reform of existing abuses is going to encounter the stubborn objection of vested interests that profit by such abuses. For instance, I believe it would be conservative to say that the community in which I live receives in normal years an income of probably $25,000 from persons entering it from neighboring states for the purpose of matrimony. Not only the county clerk and the officiating clergyman receive fees, but taxi drivers, hotels, restaurants, jewelers, gas stations and some times self-appointed 'friends' and 'advisers' of young couples receive financial compensation.

Death of Charles Edward Zehner

Charles Edward Zehner, aged 47 years and three months, died at his home on Negro Mountain, Friday morning, December 9th, after a long illness.

Mr. Zehner was a son of the late Henry and Margaret Zehner of this county. He was on Negro Mountain and lived most of his life in that community. For several years he was a Garrett county school teacher. In 1910 he married Miss Pearl Cramer and entered the United States railway mail service as a clerk on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, working between Washington, D. C., and Grafton, West Va., when his health failed, caused by high blood pressure and lung complications. He was forced by these handicaps to resign his position and returned to Garrett county where he purchased a farm on Negro Mountain and made a home for his family, engaging in farming and the poultry raising business. Nine years ago Mr. Zehner suffered a stroke of paralysis, followed at intervals by seven others. The last one, which he suffered nine months ago, rendered him entirely helpless, weakening his heart and finally causing his death.

Mr. Zehner bore all his misfortunes bravely, doing all he could in every way to assist in the management of his family's welfare He was a good husband and kind father, highly respected by his neighbors and business associates and was a faithful member of the German Lutheran church all his life.

Funeral services were held from the German Lutheran church, Cove, Monday morning with Rev. H. H. Fickenscher, the pastor, conducting the service which was attended by a large number of relatives and friends. The pallbearers were Charles Harmon, Melchoir Kolb, Oscar Harmon, Wm. Hanft, Frederick Dunn and Louis Harmon. Interment was made in the churchyard.

Farm Dwelling Damaged By Fire

The Grantsville Fire Department was again called into action Tuesday afternoon when the residence of Claude Yoder, two miles northwest of Grantsville, was found to be on fire. The fire had its incipiency in the ceiling and wall of a lower room from an overheated pipe which passed through the upper floor of the dwelling. Mr. Yoder was absent from the house at the time. Mrs. Yoder and her two children were alone when smoke was noticed. An infant was in a room just above where the fire started and after rescuing the baby from the smoke-filled room she quickly closed all doors and gave the alarm. A farm hand and neighbors were already at work when the fire truck arrived and together they soon put out the fire. A large hole was burned through the ceiling and wall. Other damage was slight.

MT. LAKE PARK

The fall of wet snow festooned the trees and shrubs, making a picture no artist could duplicate. But the joy of contemplation of the beautiful was somewhat marred by the thought that paths had to be cleared. That back-breaking job certainly takes the joy out of life.

Some way or other a rather heavy fall of snow recalls our old and departed friend, Jake Echard. At a time when we were not as used to low temperatures and snow-covered ground as we are now, many mornings while we were snugly covered in a warm bed, Jake was out with his snow plow and when we came down to breakfast we found that he had made paths, not only along the main roads, but had thoughtfully driven into our yard and cleared a convenient path. But that was characteristic of Jake Echard—doing little unexpected favors that made life seem just a little better.

Of late we have noticed that door-to-door salesmen are becoming more common. Many of them are selling inferior products. In times like these the bars must be let down somewhat in order that those who desire, may, at least keep the wolf from the door. And, in our opinion, no ordinance should be invoked against any of our own people who by canvassing, are trying to make a living. Such work takes a burden from the Welfare associations. But it would seem that strangers should rely for their trade on the people of their own communities, and that the Park, in fact the county, should be left open for such work for those who are taxpayers and permanent residents. Householders should be on their guard when products are offered at their door at prices which common sense teaches can not be produced at the price asked. Certainly, an eight ounce bottle of vanilla extract, a like bottle of lemon and other articles, together with a two dollar string of beads (the sale talk) can not be sold for a dollar. Beware of the Greeks bearing gifts.

Have you seen the "depression plant?" Well, take three small lumps of coal, dampen them and put them in a bowl. Sprinkle the coal and the bottom of the bowl—but not too thickly—with the contents of three 5-cent packages of ordinary household blueing. Then add 3 tablespoons of salt, a teaspoon of ammonia, ten or twelve drops of mercurochrome. Next add 4 tablespoons of water to the bowl and contents, being careful not to wash off the blucing, etc. Set aside and presently the depression plant will begin to bloom.

Miss Vivian Clary entertained three tables of bridge at her home in Loch Lynn last Thursday evening. The guests included friends from Oakland and the Park.

Mr. Alfred Moon has about recovered from the effects of a fall on the ice. For a short time he was quite ill.

Mr. E. O. Fouch has returned to his work at the B. and O. tower after having been off for several days with an attack of influenza.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred C. Fleming closed their cottage last week and have returned to their home in Fairmont. They were accompanied by Mrs. E. C. Frame who will remain as their guest for a short time.

Mr. C. A. Oswell has returned from an extended trip in the east.

The rather severe weather and slippery streets for the past week have kept our people pretty much around their own firesides. Consequently, while items of interest are somewhat scarce here in the winter months, they are unusually so this week.

Rumors are again afloat that the B. and O. tower is to be closed. No one seems to be able to locate their persistent. Let us hope it is just another case of "they said" and " I heard."

Robert Wildesen, Mrs. Frank Wildesen and Mrs. Charles Duckworth, of the Oak Grove community, were callers at the home of Mr. Samuel Steyer one day last week.

Miss Wilma Steyer, who spent the week with Mrs. I. L. Neville, at Bayard, returned to her home Friday evening.

Miss Cook, of Bayard, W. Va., was a guest of Miss Virginia Welch for a week.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

The task of textual criticism is one that should be approached in the spirit of perfect reverence, and at the same time with a profound loyalty and devotion to truth. As late as 1878 Dr. Henry M. Harman, one of the ripest scholars of his day, acknowledged with regret that the text of the Septuagint, or Greek version of the Scriptures, was still in an unsettled state. This was in some measure due to the fact that no very critical edition of it had been made. Different Greek versions made subsequently have been more or less mixed with it. Of these versions three are outstanding:

1. That of Aquila, who according to Irenaeus and others, was a Jewish proselyte (that is, a convert from heathenism to Judaism) born in Pontus probably in the first part of the second century. This version, made for the Jews, who preferred it to the Septuagint, was remarkably literal, so that it not infrequently gave an obscure rendering.

2. The version of Theodotian, who according to the same authority was a proselyte of Ephesus being about the middle of the second century. This appears to have been a revised edition of the Septuagint, as it took a middle course between the Septuagint and the version of Aquila. The Greek version of Daniel used by the early Christians was that of Theodotian.

3. The version of Symmaehus, who was a Jew, possibly an Ebionite, living about A. D 200. This version was not so literal as those of Aquila and Theodotian, and for that reason was praised by Jerome.

As the Septuagint had been greatly corrupted, either through the carelessness of copyists or the daring spirit of those who either added to, or took from, the text, to correct it according to their fancies. Origin, the greatest scholar of his age, undertook the task of comparing the different Greek versions with the original Hebrew, in columns, by the following method: He placed in the first column the original Hebrew characters; in the second the Hebrew text with Greek letters, giving the pronunciation of the Hebrew; in the third, the text of Aquila, as being next to the Hebrew in accuracy; in the fourth, that of Symmachus; in the fifth, the text of the Septuagint; in the sixth, that of Theodotian.

The work being arranged, for the most part, in six columns, it was called Hexapla. This great work was most likely never completed. Fifty years after the death of Origin it was brought by Eusebius and Pamphilius from its obscurity into the library of Pamphilius, at Caesarea, in Palestine, where Jerome found it and made use of it. It is supposed that it perished when the Arabs captured and destroyed Caesarea, A. D. 653.

The young people of this community are engaged in preparing a program to be rendered at White Church on Christmas eve. The entertainment promises to be a good one.

ATTENDANCE TAXES FACILITIES OF FREE TUBERCULOSIS CLINICS

Specialists Hold 193 Clinics - 3888 Patients Examined - Christmas Seals Help Support

After nine years of continuous operation the attendance this year at the free chest clinics of the Maryland Tuberculosis Association outnumbered that of any previous year. When the clinics were started it was thought by some health workers that the attendance would have a tendency to decline over a period of years. This, however, has not been the case in Maryland.

During the past fiscal year tuberculosis specialists acted as part-time clinicians, holding clinics monthly in most of the counties of the state. Thirty-eight hundred and eighty-eight patients were examined.

The clinics are made possible by the annual sale of Christmas Seals and are held in cooperation with the State Health Department. Clinicians who held clinics in the counties were:

Doctor Leo V. Schneider, Montgomery County.

Doctor Chas. D. Steenken, Superintendent Eastern Shore Sanatorium, Somerset, Wicomico and Worcester Counties.

Doctor L. H. Seth, Wittman, Md., Kent, Queen Anne and Talbot Counties.

Doctor Victor F. Cullen, Director of the State Sanatoria of Maryland, Frederick County.

Doctor S. S. Shaffer, a member of the staff of the State Sanatorium, Allegany and Washington Counties.

Doctor William A. Bridges, Director of Eudowood Sanatorium, Anne Arundel, Cecil and Harford Counties.

Doctor D. St. Clair Campbell, Deputy State Health Officer, La Plata, Md., Calvert, Charles and St. Mary's Counties.

Doctor Seth H. Hurdle Deputy State Health Officer, Salisbury, Md., Caroline and Dorchester Counties.

Doctor John E. O'Neill, Superintendent Henrytou Sanatorium, Howard and Queen Anne Counties.

Health and Happiness at Miracle House

"WE SHALL BE HEALED"

By Victor Croley

Wistful and still, on porches, row on row,
We wait and hope and watch life hurry past;
And it is one with us when shadows fall,
And all the same when morning comes at last.

We know the prize of patience and of rest,
We know that only thus is victory won;
But we are young, and driven by the fires
Of work to do before our webs are spun. . . .

We calm our hearts; we know His way is best,
And faith becomes an all-protecting shield;
For each of us another dawn will break—
Someday we shall be, will be healed.

EDITOR'S NOTE: This poem was written expressly for the Christmas Seal sale by Victor Croley, who was confined to bed with tuberculosis for six years. "After a half starved and neglected childhood, I went to work at the ripe age of twelve," he writes. "I was tortured by envy of others' happiness and the ambition to become rich enough to have a vacation, so that after working beyond my strength all day I spent half the night in public libraries and at night schools. I was kicked out because I couldn't stay awake."

At one time he got a job singing in a cheap movie show so he could go to high school during the day. When he was eighteen years old he weighed under 100 pounds, and had already entered upon a promising career as an advertising writer in New York City. Two years later he was discovered to have a far advanced case of tuberculosis. Today, thanks to modern sanatorium technique, he weighs 140 pounds, feels better than ever before, and is looking forward to a second and happier start in life.

"My case should be a warning to everyone who does not know enough to take care of himself," says Mr. Croley. "Why cannot young people be taught the need of good health habits as a protection against tuberculosis? I hate to think that anyone else should have to go through what I have suffered because he did not know."

For twenty-five years Christmas Seals have been trying to prevent just such cases as Mr. Croley's by teaching the facts he learned through bitter experience and has outlined so concisely in his last two sentences.

BIRTH AND DEATH RECORD ARE VITALLY IMPORTANT

Either Must Be Reported Within Short time After Occurrence

Asked about the registration of births and deaths in Maryland, Dr. John Collison, Chief of the Bureau of Vital Statistics of the State Department of Health, said, "The Bureau of Vital Statistics is the legal custodian of the records of birth and death. When a birth occurs the State registration law requires that it be reported within four days by the physician or midwife in attendance. The same law requires that a death certificate be filled out by the physician in attendance within twenty-four hours after the death occurs. These reports are eventually received at the Bureau and are placed on file as permanent legal records.

"Records of birth and death are of vital importance to the individual and the Bureau of Vital Statistics makes every possible effort to have every birth registered. In spite of this, however, some are not recorded. Numerous instances have come to light where the failure to have the birth reported has caused great inconvenience to the applicant. Registration of deaths is more complete as it is necessary to obtain a buriel permit before interment takes place.

"The most frequent reason given by applicants for copies of birth certificates are:

To enter school; to obtain permit to work; to obtain passport; to qualify for civil service examination; to settle court cases; to obtain inheritances and establish identity.

"The principal reasons given by applicants for copies of death certificates are:

"To obtain life insurance, pensions and inheritances; to transfer title to property; to probate wills; to settle court cases; to remarry.

"When you require a record of a birth or a death, write to the State Department of Health, 2411 North Charles street, Baltimore, if the birth or death occurred in the counties of Maryland, and to the Baltimore City Health Department if it occurred in that city. In the application give the name of the person, the date and place of birth or of death, the reason for the request, and, in the application for a record of birth, the names of the parents.

"A fee of fifty cents is charged for a record of a birth or death when certified by the State Registrar to be a true copy of the original certificate. This is, by law, prima facie evidence in all courts and places of the facts therein stated. Such copies are furnished free to persons formerly in the military service of the United States Government when they are to be used in connection with any claim against the Government, and to agents of the United States Government or of the State of Maryland and its subdivisions.

"No charge is made for a statement of the date of birth to be used to enter school or to obtain a permit to go to work."

Homemakers' Column

By Miss Margaret Kirby Burtis

The following recipe may be prepared by steaming in empty baking powder cans, wrapped in wax paper and attractively tied with a ribbon, catching a sprig of holly in the bow, or they may be steamed in small angel cake pans. In this case, fill the centers with nuts and dried raisins, decorate with holly and mistletoe and place in a Christmas box in a nest of waxed paper.

Fruit Cake

One-half pound of butter ½ pound of sugar, 6 eggs, beaten, 1 eup flour, 1 teaspoon nutmeg, 1 teaspoon cloves, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, 4 teaspoons of baking powder, ½ lb. currants, ½ lb. raisins, ½ lb. citron, 1 tablespoon of flavoring. Cream the butter and sugar add the beaten eggs, then spices, baking powder and flour which have been sifted together; stir in fruit which has been dredged with flour, and lastly add the flavoring. Bake in deep pan. Steam three hours, cover with paper and bake in slow oven 45 minutes.

Salted Almonds

Crack and shell the nuts, scald by pouring boiling water over the nuts and allowing to stand a few minutes or until the skin seems loose. Pour off the water and slip the nuts from the skins by pressing between the thumb and finger. Allow to dry thoroughly before frying.

Heat a vegetable oil, in a deep sauce pan, until hot enough to brown unglazed paper in 30 seconds or until about 395 degrees F. Now fry a few almonds at a time by placing in a strainer which is small enough to let the nuts down into the fat. Leave in fat until delicately brown or golden. This will only take a minute or so. Remove and drain on brown paper while frying the next handful. Sprinkle with salt. These are now ready to serve. One finds them much less expensive and more delicious when blanched and fried at home.

Syrup for Popcorn Balls

One and one-fourth cups corn syrup, 1 cup sugar, 1 tablespoon water, 1 teaspoon butter, 1 tablespoon vinegar, vanilla. Boil until a hard ball is formed when a little of the syrup is dropped in cold water. Remove from fire and pour over freshly popped corn until the mass begins to stick together.

Glaze Fruit and Nuts

The following syrup may be used for dipping fruits and nuts:

Two cups of sugar, 1 cup boiling water, 1 teaspoon vinegar. Boil until a cracking sound is heard when a little of the syrup is dropped into cold water. Remove from fire and stop boiling by placing the pan in cold water for a few seconds. Do not leave until cold, and if the syrup becomes too stiff to work with place the pan in warm water to soften. Dip clean, dry nuts, grapes, sections of oranges or grapefruit or apples, using a hat pin, pincers or olive tongs as is convenient to remove the material from the syrup. Place on oiled paper.

BITTINGER

The first considerable snow of the present season is now with us and still more is falling, adding a cheerful whiteness to the winter scene.

Herman Englehart, of Oakland, passed through this village one day last week, stopping by the way to call on old friends and acquaintances.

Clark Brenneman, an employe of the Kelly-Springfield Tire Company at Cumberland, is home with his family, bringing the report that the plant is closed down for an indefinite period of time.

Mrs. Perry H. Broadwater and her daughter, Mrs. Lawrence Brenneman, accompanied by the latter's husband, visited friends in Grantsville one day last week.

Earl Burkholder, with a group of his associates, recently of Grantsville, now occupy the house on the Henry B. Wiley farm, near this village, and the establishment is known locally as "The Bee Hive." It has been suggested that if another letter of the alphabet be added to the second word in the name, it would be more nearly correct.

Mrs. A. J. Oester is reported as being ill at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Joel Brenneman. Dr. Davis, of Grantsville, is in attendance.

Local hunters report having seen evidence of the presence of a bear on Little Meadow Mountain and we may later have to report a bear hunt.

40 SCOUTS RE-REGISTERED FOR 1933 IN LOCAL TROOP

20 ADVANCE IN SCOUTING

Forty scouts of Oakland Troop No. 1, were re-registered for the year 1933 at National Scout headquarters, according to George Hanst, scoutmaster, who has just forwarded the list along with the annual report of the troop's activities. The year 1933 marks the beginning of the ninth consecutive year for the troop.

Twenty-four first and second class scouts passed 131 merit badges, 20 members of the troop advanced at least one rank, and other achievements for 1932 are recorded in the annual report.

Each year a re-registration is necessary, and for 1933 there were six associate scouts, twenty-one first class scouts, eight second class scouts and five tenderfoot scouts listed as remaining active in the troop. Four other boys are about ready to become Tenderfoot scouts. Eleven scouts were dropped on account of inactivity and lack of interest.

Merit Badges Passed

One hundred thirty-one merit badges were awarded 24 first and second class scouts. Badges were won in leathercraft, cooking, pioneering, swimming, pathfinding, first aid, lifesaving, handicraft, woodcarving, machinery, firemanship, animal industry, public health, personal health, dairying, beef production, sheep farming, architecture, stamp collecting, archery, canocing, wood turning, physical development, first aid to animals, camping, athletics, scholarship, music, marksmanship, bugling, bookbinding.

Hopwood Wooddell won the highest number with 16, while Carroll Casteel and Kenneth Lawton were second with 12 each. Horace O'Donnell won 11 and George Stuck, Lewis Jones and Bernard Gonder, Jr., 9 each.

Two overnight hikes with an average attendance of 18 and five day-hikes with an average attendance of 10 were taken during the year; the troop participated in civic activities, planted trees, held a program during anniversary week and assisted in other community enterprises. An average of 37 boys spent two weeks in the Scout camp on Deep Creek Lake, at a cost of 46 cents per day per boy.

A public program for the scouts, their parents and friends, will be arranged for Scout Anniversary Week in February.

Those who have been re-registered for 1933 include:

Associate scouts (those away at school but still active) Carroll Casteel, Thomas Gonder, Lewis Jones, Joseph Sollars, Howard Rathhun, James Treacy.

Second Class—John Edward Baird, Wilbur Altstetter, John Darby, Lawrence Dixon, Leroy Stewart, Robert Utterback, Jack Treacy, Maurice Treacy.

Tenderfoot—William Grant, Ralph Kahl, Howard Smouse, Laural Whipkey, J. Billie Yutzy.

About to become scouts—Guy Hinebaugh, Jack Hinebaugh, Ervin Smith, Donald Helbig.

Well, there is one thing to be said about being a Republican this year. It's a lot more exclusive than it was four years ago.

BALTIMOREANS PLEDGE AID IN USING STATE COAL

Representatives of City Industries Complete 200-Mile Tour

Thirty-five representatives of Baltimore industries and public institutions, after completing a 200-mile tour of Allegany and Garrett county mining regions last Wednesday admitted their surprise at the high quality of the coal, the modern mining methods used, the general attitude of the miners and pledged themselves to continue to increase their efforts in broadening and expanding the markets for Maryland coal.

In the nature of a business and inspection trip, the journey was arranged by the Maryland Development section of the Baltimore Association of Commerce and a special committee of Western Maryland mine operators.

A stop was made at Blaine where half the group, piloted by State Corporal Thomas Currie, went in a caravan of automobiles to Vindex, Shallmar and Kitzmiller, all in Garrett county, where the Manor Coal Company Wolf Den mines of Shallmar Coal Company and the operations of the Hamill Coal and Coke Company were viewed. The other half of the group remained on the train, continued on to Kempton where the mines of the Davis Coal and Coke Company were examined. The train to Kempton stopped at Gorman where the mine operation and tipple of the Georgian Coal Mining Company was inspected

Modern Mining Methods

The operation of the Davis Coal and Coke Company at Kempton, one of the largest in Garrett county and the Upper Potomac reginon, is a shaft mine. The visitors were taken 416 feet underground in the cage where methods of removing the coal from the earth were explained. The mines like all the principal operations in Maryland are modernly equipped throughout. Officials claim many new improvements have been added recently, and 125 men are on the payroll. Here, as at other points in Western Maryland, the mines are operated only two and three days a week. This is due to the lack of orders for coal, and the limited markets under present conditions.

At every operation the guides and reception committees warmly greeted the visitors and answered volumes of questions regarding mining and economic conditions in the respective communities. Observers say the group from Baltimore were impressed with the quality of coal mined, the nearness to the markets in Baltimore and the modern and economic methods now used.

Admire Spirit of Miners

One Baltimorean marveled at the spirit and courage of the miners throughout the entire region. He said: "It is remarkable how these people, working only two and three days a week, are able to exist, and how faithfully they continue awaiting the time when the mines will resume full time operations."

One old miner, questioned regarding living conditions, said: "The company has reduced our rent, food prices are not too high and when we are unable to pay at the company store, we are extended a limited credit. When the company can no longer carry us on their books, the Red Cross helps us."

While living conditions appear considerably below normal throughout the entire region, and there are many poverty-stricken families, due to the limited wage checks they receive, as a result of inactivity of the mines a greater part of the time, the spirit of these people, 93 per cent of whom are Americans, does appear undaunted. In every instance where a miner was questioned, his answer revealed considerable optimism and faith. He believes in his country and believes in his employer. He says "things are getting better, and if Maryland huys all the coal we can produce, we will be able to live comfortably."

CHRISTMAS BOXES TO GO TO 125 COUNTY CHILDREN

Will Also See Free Picture At Maryland Theatre Today

One hundred twenty-five children throughout the town and county will receive Christmas boxes through the efforts of the American Legion auxillary, this afternoon at the Maryland theatre.

The boxes will go to children who would not otherwise have a very enjoyable Christmas, it was stated. They have been invited to be present this afternoon. Boxes will be given away at the Maryland theatre, where Mr. Gonder has donated the use of the auditorium and will also show a picture as his share of the entertainment. The Legion Auxiliary wishes to thank each one who contributed in any way toward the party.

As a Christmas gift to the Library, the Legion auxiliary has presented the following books: "The Poor Little Rich Girl," "Just Patty," "When Patty Went to College," "Goody Two Shoes," "Polly Oliver's Troubles," "Seventeen," "Little Indian Weaver," "Wee Scotch Piper," "Little Wood Carver," "Little Dutch Tulip Girl," "Little Jeanne of France," "Shaun O'Day, of Ireland," "Little Phillipe of Belgium," "Little Mexican Donkey Boy," "The Bobbsey Twin at the Circus," "The Bobbsey Twins and their Schoolmates," "The Bobbsey Twins at Cherry Corners," "The Bobbsey Twins Wonderful Secret."

O. H. S. Dramatists Organize

At a meeting of the Oakland High School Dramatic Club, Stuart Hamill was elected president; Lois Ross, secretary, and Margaret Tillett, treasurer.

There are seventeen active members in the club and it was decided that the membership should not exceed twenty new members from the juniors and seniors. Try-outs will be held with Miss Theoda Rice, Earl C. Willis and Miss Margaret Kochenderfer, judges.

Christmas Weather Uncertain

Whether the props of the Christmas scene, glittering snow, ice and freezing winds, would remain for Sunday, was a question as the sun and warm winds continued to eat into the several inches of snow which fell here last week-end.

Today's forecast was cloudy, possibly light rain, with colder and cloudy weather due on Friday.

GOD'S GIFT TO MAN
(Christmas Lesson)

Luke 2:1-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3:16.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Best Gift to the World.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Greatest Gift.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Christmas Means to Me.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Jesus the Source of Peace and Good Will.

I. The Birth of Jesus (vv. 1-7).

1. His birth foretold.

a. Predicted by Micah (Micah 5:2).

The prophet Micah foretold the birth of the Messiah some seven hundred years before. There seemed little likelihood that this prophecy would be fulfilled even shortly before it took place. Jesus' mother was miles away in Nazareth in Galilee. God moved upon the Roman emperor to enforce the decree of taxation which brought Mary to Bethlehem at the proper time.

b. His birth predicted by Gabriel (Luke 1:26-38). Gabriel, the archangel, was sent by God to the little town of Nazareth to Mary, a Jewish maiden, who was betrothed to a carpenter by the name of Joseph, solemnly announced to her that she should give birth to the Messiah and that this Son should not be Joseph's but the child of the Holy Ghost (Matt. 1:18-21). This was in fulfillment of Isaiah 7:14. Though at first perplexed, Mary accepted the announcement with remarkable courage and devotion. To be told that she was to be a mother was nothing startling, for this was a normal desire of every married Jewish woman. However, under the circumstances she accepted motherhood at a tremendous cost. She was conscious of her virgin purity. She knew that to become a mother under such circumstances would expose her to unutterable suspicion and shame. Later the angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph also making to him the same announcement and added that the child should be called Jesus (Matt. 1:21). The virgin birth was contrary to Jewish thought and expectation; therefore, it could not have been invented by them.

2. The prediction fulfilled (vv. 1-7). Christ's birth took place at a most opportune time. It occurred when all systems of religious worship were tottering upon their foundations. The whole world being under the power of Rome made it possible for Christ's ministers to go from city to city and from country to country unmolested.

II. Jesus' Birth Announced to the Shepherds (vv. 8-14).

This was the first Christmas service.

1. To whom the announcement was made (v. 8). His birth was announced to the shepherds who were keeping watch over their flocks by night. Their humble state in life and their being busy with common duties did not prevent them from hearing this glorious message from God. Moses, Gideon, Amos, and Elisha were all called of God from the activities of life.

2. By whom the announcement was made (v. 9). The first gospel sermon was preached by an angel of the Lord. We thus see these holy beings interested in men, and having part in the announcement of God's plan for their salvation.

3. The nature of the message (vv. 10-14). It was "good tidings of great joy." The darkness of heathendom which had so long covered the earth was beginning to vanish. The casting out of Satan, the prince of this world, was about to take place. Liberty was soon to be proclaimed to those in bondage. The way of salvation was to be offered to all. No longer was the knowledge of God to be confined to the Jews, but offered to the whole world. So glorious was this news that a multitude of the heavenly host accompanied it with songs of praise.

III. The Shepherds Investigating (vv. 15, 16).

They did not stop to argue or raise questions, though these things were, no doubt, strange to them. They went immediately to Bethlehem where they found everything as reported. Here they had the privilege of first gazing upon the wondrous Savior, the very Lord of glory. They returned with gratitude in their hearts, praising God for all these wonderful things which he had revealed into them.

IV. The Shepherds Witnessing (vv. 17-20).

When they beheld the Lord of glory they could not remain silent; therefore, they went back praising God. Those who receive this gospel into their hearts must tell it out to others.

GLEAMINGS

The crown of all virtues is love or sympathy.

Fellowship with God is the balm for bruised hearts.

God is the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort.

It may well be that the good we unconsciously do exceeds the sum of our purposed benefactions.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

Won't you sit down and have a bite to eat? I'll guarantee plenty to fill your stomach, but I won't be responsible for what happens afterwards.

It's perfectly proper, folk, for I am now broken in as the chief cook, if not the bottle washer; ready and willing to offer my knowledge of homemaking to any deserving Garrett county wife who asks for it. If you do you're crazy, as if you might be that dumb.

But I've learned a lot in the last few days, and the knowledge hasn't come from a cook book, or a book on the way she is et right and proper. On the other hand I think I will write a book myself, on "Hints to the Housewife," or energy and time-saving devices in the home, by Helpful Henry. This will in all probability be dedicated to the working wives of the county, who might never show their appreciation, but with whom I am in complete sympathy for their wasted efforts.

For instance in setting the table, move as close to stove as possible. This eliminates getting up for second and third helpings. Place milk bottle in center, with an artificial flower in the neck, if decoration is desired, thus serving two-fold purpose. Leave bread in wax wrapper to keep fresh and place in convenient position. Complete pound of butter placed nearby saves dish and any jumping up for second slice. Napkin should be placed back in drawer and saved for company which probably will never come.

In cooking meal, place all vegetables in one container. Those cooking faster than others may be extracted and eaten in courses. If potatoes get done first they may be saved for a short time as their jackets will keep them warm.

If color is needed at the meal, use your red face. (May be easily obtained by bending over fire for surprisingly short time.)

Never put vegetables in dish. Allow them to remain on stove until needed. Then bend back in chair at angle of 40 degrees when plate is empty and get a refill with no wasted energy.

When meal is finished place frying pan in oven, to be used at next meal. Place dishes in sink until after last meal of the day, thus saving two soap sprinkles, two pans of water, two rinses, and no tea towels.

Favorite Menus of Mine (Copyrighted)

These recipes may be used only by special permission—of the one whom you are to feed.

Staked Steak—Prerequisite—a fire place. Go to cellar and get stake about 12 inches long. Sharpen one end and better wash it off, too. Now take a steak. With dainty rag wash dirt that may have accumulated from the butcher's hands. Place on stick. Season with salt, pepper, cinnamon, allspice, or first six boxes that you grab on shelf. Hold over flame. When it catches fire, withdraw and extinguish with fire entinguisher. When steak has been extinguished three times, it ought to be done. Take steak and stake out of fire, take steak off the stake, throw away the steak and eat the stake.

Pineapple dessert—Open can of pineapple, dump slices of fruit into dish. Take can and boil for five minutes, which brings paper off the outside. Throw can away, save paper to start fire in fireplace, and serve pineapple without milk.

Stewed Oysters—Heat milk, run out and get oysters that have been forgotten; upon return place them in the burned milk, without any salt or pepper, except during May, June, July and August. During any other month oysters are not out of season.

Carrots—If you have six carrots, take four of them, scrape, and cut in half, or quarter. Place in boiling water. Pour in quantity of salt such as would go in if lid fell off. Boil for 25 minutes.

After tasting carrots and drinking glass of fresh water, make carrot salad out of the raw ones left, and eat that.

If none of these recipes work so well, fry a couple of eggs, fix some corn flakes, bananas and cream, bread and butter, and like it. It's either that or live next to some good neighbors who know how to fix up lunches, like I did.

And how's your wife's influenza?

A Merry Christmas

Providing you read this at 5 o'clock on Thursday evening, it will still be 55 hours until Christmas, but anyway, the Boss Editor, Archibaldson, Lizzie Tish, Mary Ann "Small", Di-di Jim, and Scoop himself wish the many readers of this newspaper a very merry Christmas with much joy and happiness.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

President Kenneth C. M. Sills, of Bowdoin College, when asked for a monograph on the value of the Bible, wrote as follows: "In these days of uncertainty and distress I know of no book that is so useful both for the scholar and for the general reader as the Bible. Anything that can be done to have the Bible more widely read will be value not only to those interested in its literary merit but to all those who need refreshment and peace in these bewildered days."

Acting upon this wise counsel, the Executive Secretary of the Maryland Bible Society called one day in June upon Commander Louis J. Gulliver, of the United States Frigate Constitution, to ascertain whether this grand old ship, the pride of the United States Navy, was provided with Bibles. He learned that four Bibles were needed on board "Old Ironsides," one for the captain's cabin, one for the library, one for the ward room and one for the forecastle. Commander Gulliver graciously accepted the tender of these Bibles, one being the gift of the American Bible Society and three presented by the Maryland Bible Society.

August 7th was designated as the appropriate time for the presentation ceremonies, which took the form of a religious service. At ten o'clock a trumpeter of the Navy band blew Church Call, which was followed by an overture by the band.

Mrs. Charles Fisher Taylor then presented to the ship a church pennant, the blue cross on a white field, which flew above the Stars and Stripes during the service. This pennant was accepted for the Constitution by Chaplain S. W. Salisbury, of Washington Navy Yard.

After a sermon by Secretary Powers on the text "Blessed is the Nation whose God is the Lord," President J. Henry Baker presented the four Bibles to Lieutenant Commander Hartley with the following remarks:

"It has been said that no one can think an evil thought in the presence of the Sistine Madonna, generally considered, I believe, the world's greatest masterpiece, which adorns the wall, rather a small room, of the art gallery in Dresden, Germany. While we know this is not true, yet it does express a beautiful sentiment and if it can be said of a picture, can it not be said with even greater force of the Bible?

"While the very presence of the Bible I am sure at times has done a great deal of good, yet it is not its mere presence that I wish to stress at this time.

"In presenting these Bibles today, I wish to emphasize its teaching, its precepts the rule and guide of our faith. May those who come in contact with this Book on this ship read it, study it and be inspired and benefited by it.

"It is considered by many to be the word of God to man. It teaches him how to live, how to act toward his fellowman, how to bear trouble, how to die, and gives him assurance of a better life beyond this one.

"Lieutenant Hartley, do accept these Bibles from the American and the Maryland Bible Societies. We feel honored in presenting them to you for this old ship whose history is both wonderful and sacred. God bless 'Old Ironsides.'"

The assemblage of more than four hundred then sang America, and this memorable service was closed with the benediction, pronounced by Chaplain Salisbury.

GRANTSVILLE

Fires Burn Dwelling and Barn

Fire of undetermined origin burned the frame barn located on the Ridgeley farm, three miles south of Grantsville, Saturday midnight. Stanley Stanton, who lives on the farm, discovered the fire in the sheep stable when he entered the barn late in the evening, he having been away from the farm during the day, and went to the building late to care for the livestock. He succeeded in getting all of the livestock out except six half-grown pigs. The losses included an automobile, 25 tons of hay and some oats. The Grantsville Volunteer Fire Department was called and with the help of neighbors confined the blaze to the one building. Mr. Stanton carried no insurance personally, but the barn was insured.

On Saturday morning the home of Mrs. Katie Durst and her granddaughter, Louise Hoover, situated about two miles west of Grantsville, was completely destroyed, with all its contents including some money, by fire, which caught from an over-heated stove pipe. The blaze had gained such headway when discovered that Miss Hoover could only get her grandmother, who has been ill for some time, from the building. Their pet dog, which was tied inside, could not be rescued. They are now living with Mrs. Durst's daughter, Mrs. Ben Butler. Mrs. Durst and Miss Hoover will appreciate any pieces of furniture or household goods which can be donated by the people of the community in order that they may again become established in a home of their own.

Saturday morning the thermometer registered seven degrees above zero; Sunday morning 9 and Monday morning 3 above zero. A snow flurry accompanied the drop in temperature and a great many of the country roads were impassable for cars. However, the farmers have been making use of the fine sledding snow to haul their coal and various other commodities and necessities.

Nick's Christmas Bag

By Jane Osborn

"THERE are a lot of men out in the lumber camps that aren't going to get home for Christmas," Margaret Tompkins told a group of young men and women at the country club early in November. "I want to get a Christmas bag for every one of them. Who'll promise a Christmas bag?"

"I'd like to help," said Nick Lorring, "only thing is I'm green at that sort of thing. Do you suppose you could get someone to make a bag and fill it if I paid for it?"

"Yes; I've thought of that," said Margaret. "I've figured out that a nice bag can be got up for three dollars."

A little later when Nick Lorring found Margaret alone he told her he wanted to be responsible for ten of the bags. "I'll send you the check in the morning."

Margaret pressed Nick's hand and looked up gratefully into his eyes. "You're the most generous man in the world," she said.

Nick yearned to take this opportunity to tell Margaret just a little of his ever-increasing love for her, but to do it now, it seemed, would be to taint with self-interest the tenor of his generosity.

The afternoon before Christmas Margaret telephoned to Nick at his office.

"I want to tell you, Nick," said Margaret, "that I filled all the bags and they were so wonderful. Each one cost just three dollars. Now I find that there is just one left over after all the men at the camp have been supplied. As it is all filled, I can't return the money, but I thought maybe you knew of some poor fellow who might like one."

Nick thought a moment as he held the telephone receiver. "I do know a fellow," said he. "Used to work for us. Then he quit and went to farming over in the next county. Sort of a luckless fellow. Suppose I take that bag over to him."

So after the office closing at five, Nick called at Margaret's for the bag. He planned to drive the fifteen miles to the shack where Barry Smith lived and back before his seven o'clock dinner.

The cabin seemed deserted. Nick forced a window and walked in. But Barry was not to be found. Nick felt in his pocket for a match, but matches he had none. Then he groped around Barry's room, but was no more successful. So with nearly frozen fingers he undid the wrappings from the Christmas bag, opened it and found,

"Yes; I've Thought of That," Said Margaret.

as he had hoped, a box of matches with the cigarettes and tobacco in the bag. By the time he had lighted a lamp, found fuel and warmed himself, the storm had covered the roads so that to attempt to return that night would be an act of folly. So Nick spent Christmas in poor Barry's forlorn cabin.

Fortunately for Nick, he carried, in in his car, a box of groceries, bacon, bread and butter as a present to Barry to help through the winter. Much of this he left for Barry on his return; from the rest he made his own rather meager Christmas dinner. But if it hadn't been for Margaret's bag, Christmas would have been a doleful duy, indeed.

When Nick went to see Margaret on his way home on December 26, he found her in a state of real agitation.

"Somehow I felt responsible for the whole thing," said Margaret.

"You were responsible for the fact that I had a rather pleasant Christmas after all. You kept me from freezing and starving to death, you cheered me with a good book, smokes and a mouth organ, and kept me from degradation by means of soap and a comb. That bag was a godsend."

"Oh, Nick," said Margaret, with eyes very tender. "I feel as if I knew you so much better because of this."

"Margaret," said Nick, "I've been trying to get up nerve for three months to tell you I love you—to distraction."

"And ever since you sent me the check for the bags I've known I wanted to hear you tell me," answered Margaret.

LITTLE COLD SHOULD NOT BE NEGLECTED, IS ADVICE

May Open Way For Serious Illness, Health Department Says

In a reminder to mothers that the "little cold," if neglected, may open the way for serious illness, Dr. J. H. M. Knox, Jr., Chief of the Bureau of Child Hygiene of the State Department of Health, says: "If your child begins to sniffle, if his nose runs, and he becomes languid and irritable, put him to bed, give him a liquid diet, plenty of water and call your doctor. Untreated and neglected colds often lead to serious illnesses

"The trouble may begin with a sore throat or a cough. Usually a sore throat indicates inflammation of the tonsils, from which the infection may spread to the ears and through the body. A cough generally means that the child has an irritation in the throat or in his bronchial tubes. The only safe plan—and the best plan—in any case, is to put the child to bed and under a doctor's care, as soon as either a sore throat or a cough develops, especially if there is any indication of fever. The earlier the proper treatment is begun the sooner the recovery will take place. In addition, the likelihood of the trouble spreading to others is greatly reduced.

"It must be remembered, too, that a number of serious communicable diseases may begin with what appears to be a 'common cold.' The doctor should be asked early to decide and take the necessary precautions.

"Parents can do a good deal to prevent these respiratory infections among their children by following these simple directions:

1. "Give your children a well-balanced diet as suggested by your physician.

2. "See that children have plenty of fresh air day and night. A window should be open in the bedroom, the child protected from drafts, and have on just sufficient clothing to keep him warm. No daytime indoor temperature should be over 70 degrees.

3. "Let the child up to school age have a midday nap in a well-ventilated room each day.

4. "Dress children properly so that they are not too warm in the house and have such additional clothing as is indicated by the temperature when they go out. Keep feet dry; if they become wet, change shoes and stockings as soon as possible.

5. "A cool sponge after the bath and while the child is standing in warm water, followed by a brisk rubdown, is recommended.

6. "Most important of all are that the baby or young children should be kept away from other children and from adults who have a cold or other respiratory infection, and that your doctor should be consulted when the first symptoms of a cold appear."

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1932.

The Prince of Peace

It is a beautiful tradition that on the night on which Jesus was born angelic voices were heard singing of peace. Ever since that unforgetable night, men in increasing numbers have been trying to reproduce on earth the song of the skies, but, alas! it is a difficult tunc to carry. We live in a quarrelsome world. The air is filled with discords. Society is torn by dissensions. Every city is a scene of strife. Every village has its turmoil of squabbling and wrangling. The fountain of bitterness is always flowing. The temple of the god of ill-will is crowded evermore.

It is just the kind of world that has need of Christmas, for Christmas brings to mind the song of the angels and makes vivid the figure of one who says, "My peace I give unto you!" Many of us pray every day, "Thy kingdom come," and Christmas nudges us with the query, "What are you doing to bring it?"

Christmas comes, then, with a clear and penetrating message It has an urgent word for all quarrelsome girls and fighting boys. It speaks admonishly to husbands and wives who have allowed a quick temper to spoil the year, and who find themselves slowly drifting apart. It laps its hand on masters and servants and endeavors to draw them closer together. It reminds employers and employes that they are not foes, but brethren. It chides labor and capital for fighting. It whispers a sweet remonstrance into the ears of all who carry in their hearts resentments and grudges. It reproves those who think disdainfully of fellow mortals who belong to another class or circle. It begs all who have become estranged to wipe out the old scores, to get rid of the old misunderstandings, to begin life over. It proclaims once more to all races and peoples that God has made of one blood all the nations of men.

Christmas comes with a personal message for rulers and statesment, for diplomats and the makers of laws. It repeats to them the old message of God's love and reminds them of a kingdom of whose increase there shall he no end. Christmas is a good time to think of international duties and responsibilities, and of what it is possible for America to do in creating a world-wide and enduring peace. Snrely a Christian nation ought every year to take a new step along the road of conciliation.

A Merry Christmasl Thus we speak to one another every Christmas morning. The words have music in them only when they come from a heart touched by the spirit of brotherliness and good-will. This spirit was incarnate in Jesus of Nazareth, and it is through Him that God makes peace. Each succeeding celebration of the anniversary of His birth ought to spread His gentle and gracious sovereignty over wider ereas of life, until the whole round earth shall sing at last the song of the angelic host.—Reprinted from The Republican of December 26, 1912.

"It would be Interesting," says a New York financial writer who favors debt cancellation, "to hear the view of some congressmen if they were in the position of French deputies." Yes. And it would be interesting too to hear the views of some of the French deputies if they were In the place of some of our congressmen. If Uncle Samo wed France as much money as Sam owed Franch as much money as shrieks of the French deputies in demanding payment could be heard as far as Patagonia without benefit of a microphone.

Arthur Brisbane said the other day: "Big American incomes have melted like thin snow with a cow lying on it" And if you will look at the livestock market reports you will find that the cow hasn't been doing so well either.

EVEN IF IT IS CHRISTMAS—

Don't set up the tree so that it can topple over easily and don't place it near heating or lighting fixtures.

Don't use lighted candlcs on trees.

Don't usc paper, cotton or celluloid ornaments. Incombustible trimmings may now be purchased.

Don't allow smoking near Christmas trees.

Don't permit paper to accumulate.

Don't be carcless in the use of electrical equipment or in extending wiring.

Don't give small children dangerous toys—such as those requiring alcohol, kerosene or gasoline.

Don't permit use of nitracellulose film in home motion picture machines. This is dangerous because it is extremely inflammable and, in burning, releases fumes causing death. Use only "safety" film, known as acetate film.

Don't neglect to keep handy something with which to put out the fire that does happen to start.

Don't keep the Christmas tree up after December 31st. It becomes dried out after a few days in the house.

The foregoing are safety suggestions of the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

"NOT HIS BABY—"

There is a phase of the statement reported to have been made by Governor Roosevelt that the war debt problem is not his baby that ought not to go unchallenged. All the discussion of this question, and particularly of President Hoover's efforts to meet the crises that it has occasioned seems to proceed on the assumption that the present administration is responsible for the war debt tangle as it exists today.

But it is only fair to ask, who created the war debt? Has it been forgotten that this problem was created by a Democratic administration, and that it was handed along to the Republican leaders in 1920, when they came into control of the government?

If the war debt problem is not Governor Roosevelt's baby personally, it is most decidedly the offspring of the party that he now has the honor to represent. Nothing is to be gained now by starting a discussion of the origin of these obligations. There are many who believe, however, that the present volume of debt might have been far smaller if the Wilson administration had not yielded so easily to the arts of foreign persuasion, and opened the doors of the United States Treasury wide to foreign demands. If this financial assistance seemed necessary to save Germany's opponents from defeat, at least some consideration might have been given to the possibility of repayment before continuing loans to these nations after the armistice.

Nothing is to be gained by discussing that which has been done, into which cannot be changed. But there is some ill grace in the titular leader of the Democratic party disowning responsibility for the offspring of his own party at a time when his cooperation is asked in meeting the crisis that has arisen therefrom.

MEXICO PERKS UP

American farmers who voted for a change, thinking it might help their commodity prices, and especially the truck farmers of the South who supply the great cities of the United States with vegetables in the "off season," will be interested to know that the farmers in Mexico, especially in the northern part of the Latin republic, are expecting the change of administrations in the United States to give them a "new deal," and considerable help.

According to press dispatches these Mexican farmers think that the new administration will break several holes in our agricultural tariff walls and that Mexican agriculture will benefit as a result. Farmers in northern Mexico raise a great many tomatoes, string beans, carrots and other farm truck, which they have ready for market in the winter time. The present American tariff protects the vegetable grower of our own Southern states from the import of cheap foreign vegetables grown by peon labor.

But the Mexican farmer now believes that the tariff will be lowered, perhaps by the "trade agreements" we heard so much about from Governor Roosevelt in the recent campaign, and that he will benefit as a result. If he benefits, of course, it will be at the expense of the truck farmers of our own Southern states. Tinkering with the tariff on Mexican vegetables will undoubtedly bring a change, but it may not be the kind the American farmers voted for.

We believe that the fellow who collects the installment on our radio and electric washer could get that money which France owes us if all other methods fail.

S. O. S. Feed The Birds!!!

The appeal to the general public annually to feed the birds has produced wonderful results. It is very essential, if we expect to maintain wildlife that a winter feeding program be established in every community and, in fact, there should be a special effort made, for every person, not only the agriculturalist, orchardist and woodland owners, but residents of the towns and cities of our State, could co-operate by furnishing a dinner table for the song and insectivorous birds which visit their homes.

After the close of the upland game season, December 31, 1931, our winter continued mild. However, the majority of the counties of Western Maryland carried on a winter feeding program which proved to be of great benefit to our wildlife.

The best evidence of the benefit of the winter feeding program is shown in sections where it has been extensively carried on and the results are that thousands of pieces of broodstock have been saved during the past few years, which has greatly contributed to the increase in our wildlife supply and unless such action is taken game, song and insectivorous birds and fur-bearing animals of certain species would have been almost extinct in certain sections of this State.

Agriculturalists, orchardists and timberland owners, as well as florists, should be especially interested in the establishment and maintenance of feeding stations. The welfare of crops and the economic success of the farm, orchardists and forests are very closely related to the number and kinds of birds present, the vast majority of which are very beneficial and merit protection. It is impossible to estimate the value in dollars and cents saved by argiculturalists and other industries of this country thru the destruction by birds of injurious insects and obnoxious weed seeds. A song bird, at one meal, often devours from one hundred to several thousand insects and obnoxious weed seeds.

Feeding Stations

Feeding stations are very inexpensive and one of the best methods is to use the ordinary field corn, cut at the ground from which the fodder has been stripped, set in the form of an Indian teepee, leaving the bottom open at all times so the birds may escape vermin, if attacked. Scatter the grain inside and when established, it is bound to attract within a short period, the birds of the neighborhood, which will soon learn to avail themselves of the food furnished by human kindness.

There are other methods which can be used. One is to cut a long pole, nail from tree to tree, or place each end on a forked stick and pile brush or corn fodder at one side covered with straw, always leaving the opening to the south. Grain of any kind may be used, and what is known as chick grain is very beneficial to the majority of birds as it contains seeds of various kinds which cannot be found in other grains.

For the song and insectivorous birds which are so beneficial to our agriculturalists throughout the entire year, a little shelf on the window or erected in a tree on which suet can be placed daily will serve as a dinner table for these very essential species. Suets and meats can also be tied with a string to the limbs of trees or to poles and the birds will pick it as they need it. Large house sparrows (English sparrows) are very troublesome; the aforementioned foods may be suspended at the end of two feet of cord, tied to the end of a limb in such manner that it will swing freely in the wind. Only birds accustomed to feeding in the swaying limbs of the trees can successfully take food so placed. Mixed grain, such as scratch feed, chopped screenings, sweepings from barn floors and graineries, table scraps, bread crumbs, nuts and similar foods are very useful at feeding stations and furnish excellent foods for birds.

With the mercury hugging the zero mark in Oakland Monday morning, it stood many degrees above that in other parts of the county. In Grantsville it read 20 or more above; in the Ryan's Glade section 26 above was noted, while at Kitzmiller the reading was 20 or more above zero. Thus it is likely that Oakland was the coldest spot in Garrett county that morning.

The Light Brigade of St. Mark's Lutheran church of Oakland held a Christmas social at the home of Mrs. Foster Bittle on Tuesday afternoon. Forty children were present and each brought something for Christmas boxes which are to be given out to families not likely to have much Christmas cheer. Thirty-two children of the community will be presented with boxes made up from the gifts thus donated. Refreshments were served by Mrs. Bittle at the conclusion of the party.

In recent years it has been customary for members of the Woodmen of the World lodge at Loch Lynn Heights to have a banquet during the holiday season at which ever vdelicacy was served. This year, however, appreciating conditions as they exist, the banquet will be quite a tame affair, the membership at a recent meeting placing the banquet in the discard and voted unanimously to expend the banquet money for relief work, hence the men of the lodge assisted by their wives will be engaged tomorrow in packing baskets of groceries and other necessities and distributing them to the needy of the community, which is a most commendable thing to do.

Among the students who have returned to spend the Christmas holidays with their home folk are Carroll Casteel, Washington college, Chestertown: Lewis Jones, West Virginia Wesleyan, Buckhannon; Logan Weber, University of Maryland; Mary Lynn McIntire, University of Maryland; Betty Broadwater and Adeline Stuck, Hood college, Frederick; Marian Brock, Mary Baldwin, seminary, Staunton, Va.; Lindsay Gonder, Charlott Hall academy; Thomas Gonder, lotte Hall Academy; Thomas Gonder, Jr., West Virginia University; Mitchell Franklin, University of Maryland; Howard Rathbun, Western Maryland college; Evelyn Bosley, Drexel Institute, Philadelphia; Marshall Brown, Fairmont State Teachers' college; Humbird Offutt, Fork Union Military academy, Va.

Garrett countians, or at least some of them have heard of the "Chinook" winds, which at times sweep over the Rockies, melting the snow as though the blast from a furnace had been turned upon it. This condition existed to some degree in Oakland yesterday morning when at seven o'clock the mercury showed a few degrees above zero. In ten minutes thereafter, the warm wind from the south having started, the thermometer registered sixteen above and in less than an hour from that time it stood at above 30 degrees and still rising. It is said that in the Rockies when the "Chinook" wind starts snow and ice packs break up with startling reverberations, at times almost deafening. The Wednesday morning wind may not have been genuinely "Chinook", but it was certainly closely related, for the result was the same.

1933 Auto Tags Make Appearance on Streets

Although the number of 1933 license plates for automobiles distributed in the State since November 28 was 20,000 less than the number given out in the same period last year, the blue and white markers for the coming year have been making their appearance on the streets of Oakland and on the highways of Garrett county since last Thursday, the first day the markers could lawfully be displayed.

Only 84,000 persons had received their new markers to date, whereas last year 105,000 were in possession of the plates at that date.

Applications were mailed to 300,000 motor vehicle owners in November with instructions to get their new plates as soon as possible. No period of grace will be granted to automobile owners after midnight, December 31. The cars must display the new markers or be kept off the streets and highways of the State, it was stated.

Seventeen marriage licenses were issued during the past week ending Monday at noon from the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court in Oakland, bringing the total for December thus far to 46.

This number is below the average for the same period last year, but it is expected that the Christmas rush will bring the total up to normal for the entire month. Four licenses were issued with the request that they be not published in The Republican, and six of the entire number issued during the week were secured on Saturday.

Christmas Gifts

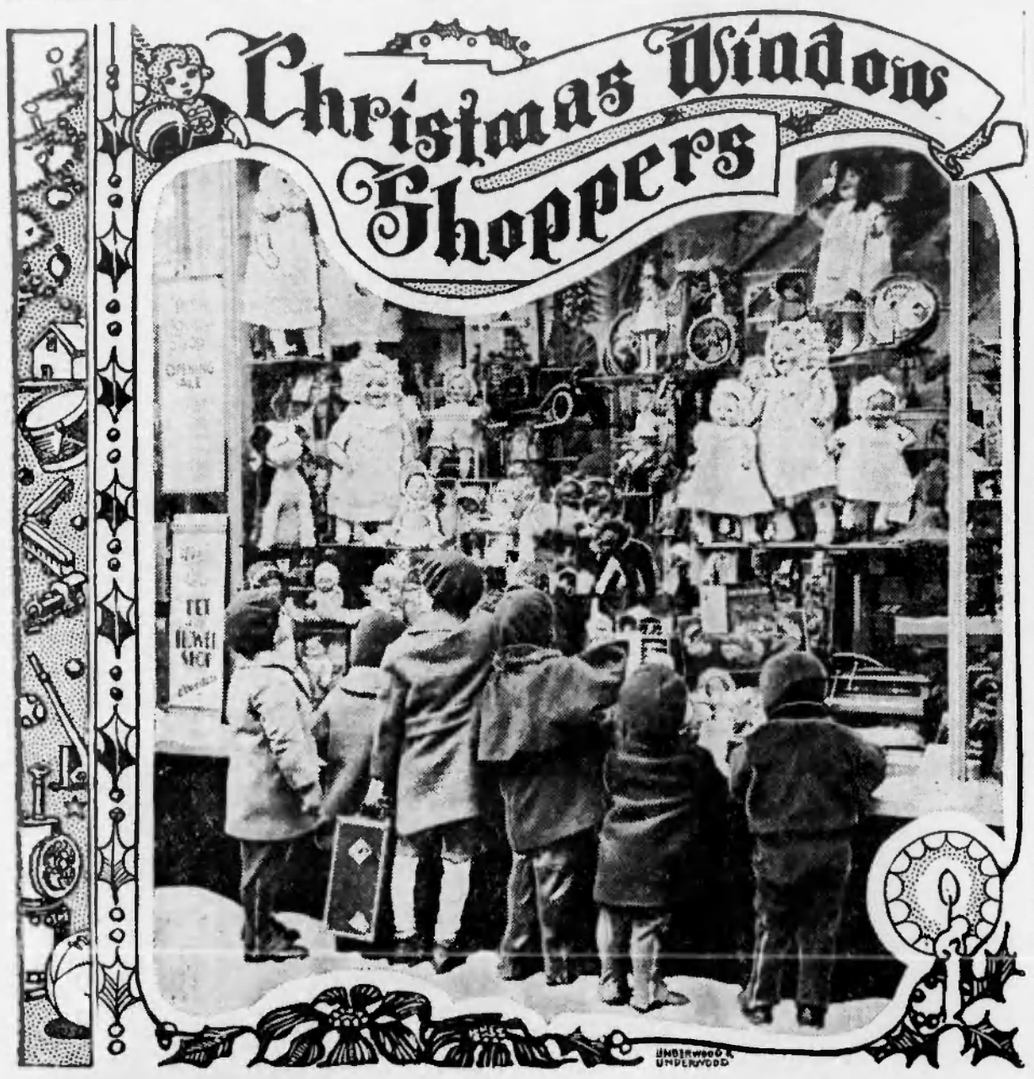
For this one thing we may be truly thankful---

The return of sane Christmas giving. In past years, Christmas giving was nothing more than an orgy of spending, until the strain of it took all the pleasure and joy out of giving. This year, with so much distress on every hand, extravagant, useless gifts are decidedly bad taste. Our gift suggestions have been chosen with sane fore-thought. We have used our best efforts, with more than forty years of successful merchandising experience behind us, to secure only such merchandise as would continue to render service and satisfaction, thus engendering a feeling of constant appreciation toward the giver, long after some trifling gee-gaw would have been gone and forgotten.

May we invite you to inspect our large variety of practical gifts?

"We Serve You Well and Save You Money"

H. C. Sincell



by Vivian Hayes

EFFIE ANN adjusted her furs and arose, her round black eyes refusing to meet the piteous gaze of the little old lady before her.

"I know you'll be reasonable, mother," she concluded, "and see that, needing money as Edwin does right now, he couldn't do differently. When pa died and Edwin bought this house of you to help you out, he had every notion of letting you stay right here, as he told you; but the $1,000 is absolutely needed to set us on our feet again—and with a customer turning up right now and willing to pay cash—well, 'twas nothing short of providential, and the deal was made out last night."

She bit her lip and reddened as she shot a furtive glance at the bent figure, then rushed on, nervously: "Of course you're to come right over with us as soon as Christmas is over. Packing up will be easy, for, knowing you'd have no further use for your furniture, Edwin's told the customer he could buy it just as it stood, and, of course, the money'll be yours—a nice, tidy sum—for Mr. Craig was all carried away with your braided rugs and old dishes and furniture; said it made him think of his boyhood home.

"He's over to the Gleadale sanitarium now for his health—got nervous dyspepsia, or some such thing. Well, I must be rushing along."

Halting in the doorway, she called back sharply: "If that good-for-nothing brother of Edwin's comes 'round here tomorrow asking for us, you send him about his business lively. He can smell a Christmas dinner a mile off."

The door closed resoundingly.

Sunshine poured into the spotless kitchen in a golden flood, lingered lovingly on the bright braided rugs and china closets laden with willowware, china and pewter. The grandfather clock ticked contentedly in a corner. The kettle hummed drowsily. Gleeful, the canary sang one exultant song after another.

The table with its cheerful red cloth had been drawn up to the window, daintily set for grandma's luncheon. It was the same tranquil scene upon which her eyes had rested on hundreds of other days, and upon which, after tomorrow, they would never rest again. And tomorrow was Christmas!—a day when the friendly ghosts of all the Christmases that were would stead lovingly back, only to flee in horror at lack of festal board and Christmas cheer!

It must have been the affecting picture of those disappointed ghosts of other Christmases that impelled grandmother to sit erect, swab her red eyelids, stiffen her trembling chin and resolve to thrust her troubles into the background 'til Christmas should be over. "I'll have a Christmas dinner," she planned, "just as if nothing had happened and—why, I'll invite Edwin's brother!"

Feverish with excitement, grandmother hurried to do her marketing, and for the rest of the day the old kitchen abounded with tantalizing cooking odors.

Christmas morning grandmother was early astir. Sprigs of holly graced the many-paned windows. The deep armchair had been drawn invitingly before the fireplace. The plump and tender turkey was turning an irresistible brown. Onions, turnips, squash and potatoes — white and "sweets"—were cooking merrily. The cranberry sauce had been strained and set to cool upon the pantry windowsill, and, adhering to a long-established precedent, grandmother slipped away to don her black silk dress, lace cap and snowy apron.

She was becoming a trifle anxious about her guest when she spied a gaunt figure coming up the walk. She fluttered hospitably to the doorway and beamed at the visitor.

"I declare I was getting worried for fear you wouldn't come, after all," she said. "Edwin and Ellie Ann have gone away and you're to have dinner with me. I'll dish it right up."

The visitor's gaze fastened itself upon the loaded table, and power of speech seemed to desert him.

At grandmother's request he dexterously carved the turkey, and having served his hostess, devoted himself unreservedly to eating.

"The Money'll Be Yours—a Nice Tidy Sum."

"My land," mused grandmother, aghast, "that poor creature must have been fasting for a week!"

But when the Indian pudding, pumpkin pie and fruit cake had been eaten and they were picking placidly at the nuts, the guest waxed talkative.

"How this all reminds me of home when I was a little boy—this room—a facsimile!—and you—how you remind me of mother! It must be great," he broke off sharply, "for you to have your own little home all to yourself—eh?"

The Christmas sun was already setting, reminding grandmother that her last day was almost over. With a sudden sob she shed her gallant garment of pretense, and in an overpowering hunger for sympathy, she quavered out her sad little story.

The gaunt visitor came around to her side and took her hand with clumsy tenderness.

"I'm not the guest you were expecting but when I saw that dinner—well, you couldn't understand unless you'd lived for three weeks on prunes and toast and skim milk. Anyway, I was ravenous from hunger and I haven't had a dinner of such pure, unadulterated bliss since mother cooked it. What I came over for today was to say—er—that—er—why, my wife finds she wants to live nearer the city, so I want you to consider this house absolutely yours as long as you need it. I'll have it put in writing tomorrow."

He shouldered hurriedly into his coat, then halted irresolutely in the doorway. "Maybe, some time," he ventured, uncertainly, "you'd be willing to teach my wife to cook."

by HELEN GAISFORD

THERE was sadness in the Jordon's cottage on Indian Hill. Even the merriment of an approaching Christmas season could not supersede the fact that Foster Jordan was going blind. Blind!

That was bad enough. But Foster Jordan, swathed in bandages from the operation that had failed, knew that Helen could never carry on alone. It had been so expensive, that operation that had only served to pronounce his doom more surely. All their savings were gone, and what could the most faithful of wives do, with a baby in arms, and a blind husband? The cottage would go, too, and then—

He roused himself from these gloomy forebodings at the sound of her step at the door. And that she should not think him grieving, he began to sing.

"Foster," his wife called, as the door opened, "who do you suppose is here? My old chum, Pauline Westland! You know, the costume designer in New York? Paulina, this is my husband, that I've written you so much about."

"How do you do, Miss Westland. Sorry I can't—my eyes, you know—"

"Of course. I'm so glad to meet you, Mr.—may I call you Foster? Helen has told me so much about you."

"And oh, Pauline," Helen interrupted, "here is our baby. Isn't he adorable?" Then in a whisper, "Do look more cheerful, darling! If you don't I'll cry and I mustn't do that!"

"The doctors give you no hope?"

"None whatever. But we'll get along—somehow—" Helen dabbed at her eyes with her handkerchief. "Foster, dear," she said aloud, "you were singing as we came in. Won't you sing for Pauline?"

"Yes, please do."

"I'm afraid I can't."

"Yes, you can, dear. I'll play for you." And so he sang.

At last their guest rose to go. "I can't tell you how I've enjoyed your songs," she said. "I'm so glad I stopped off on my way home for the holidays."

"You must come again," Helen answered. "I've enjoyed seeing you so much."

"I'm pleased to have met you, Foster, and I wish you both a blessed Christmastide."

Days passed, and it was Christmas. Bright and early came a special delivery letter.

"Dearest Helen," it began. "I have the grandest news for you! As soon as I got home I phoned to Jud Myers in New York. He's staging a new show that I'm designing the costumes for and has been simply wild for some act to put in the heart throbs.

"Well, I talked him into seeing that a bling singer would go over big, and raved about Foster's voice, so it's all arranged. I am enclosing his check for $500, and if you can be ready we'll all go back to New York together.

"With love for a Merry Christmas, Pauline."

SNALAGESTOR-BOVALOPUS TERRIFIES MANY PEOPLE

Strange Creature Creates Tense Situation Among Colored Population

The Shepherdstown Register under date line of November 26 carried the following interesting story concerning the snnlagestor-bovnlopus:

A number of persons residing in sections of South Mountnin, especially Clevelandville and Appletown, in Washington county, Maryland, just over the mountain from Middletown Valley, have been greatly mystified and alarmed during the past week as the result of a strange monster which flew over that region Friday afternoon, according to The Boonsboro (Md.) Times.

Eyewitnesses stated that the large objeet, dark and ominous, nppeared first down the direction of Middletown Valley, floating slowly over the mountain. Those watching it said it would change in eolor and size and at times throw out long streamers like the arms of an octopus, only to draw them in again and then sail out of sight.

Some persons who saw the monster, which is described as being as large as a dirigible, believe that it is an omen of evil as a result of the recent election. As the monster appeared to be flying directly overhead, numerous persons sought safety within their homes. However, it is said that the monster made no effort to harm anyone, but always kept some distance away, appearing and disappearing back and forward across the mountains.

From the best description of the monster obtainable by a representative of The Middletown Valley Register who visited some of the mountain sections where it was seen, it is evidently a young "Go-Devil" or "Winged Bovalopus" commonly known as a "Snalagestor," which terrified residents of several states, including this section of Maryland, in 1909. It is not believed, however, that it is the beast which was seen at that time, because the average life of the monster is said by scientists to be only 25 years. It is believed, though, that the beast may have been hatched from one of the eggs which was known to have been laid by the "Snalagestor" at that time in the mountains near Burkittsville. Scientists claim that it takes from 20 to 25 years for one of the eggs to hatch, and if such is the case, this could easily be an offspring of the "Go-Devil" which was seen in this section in 1909.

Upon the occasion of its former visit, the monster killed several colored men in New Jersey, and several persons in Washington county, Md., and Jefferson county, W. Va., made narrow escapes from the beast. The monster had previously spent several years in seclusion on an island off the coast of Mexico.

The Shepherdstown Register again carried another story under date line of Dec. 1 concerning the activities of the snalagestor in that section. The story, as they printed it, follows in part:

"Up in Terrapin Neck where the boys do their hunting and Joe Walper is monarch of all he surveys up that way, strange things have been happening. Several colored men were hunting rabbits the other evening and as the shades of night were fast enveloping that bit of land that protrudes into the Potomac one of the negroes heard a strange noise overhead, somewhat like a small landslide. Looking up, they saw a hideous creature lazily floating over them. The younger of the negroes was a slim fellow, while his companion carried an extra amount of flesh. The slim young man immediately put miles behind him, but his companoin, being heavy, was not so fortunnte and could not make much time. He tried to elude the snalagestor by dodging in and out among the trees with the bovalopus pursuing directly overhead. The only thing that saved the heavy boy was the fact that he was in the woods and the snalagestor, being so large, could not get to him through the trees. Joe Walper says he witnessed the entire episode and that the snalagestor, giving up the chase, stopped in the tall grass by the water's edge and laid an egg. It is computed that this egg will hatch about 1957, so if any of you are living at that time, keep your eyes open and stay indoors at night."

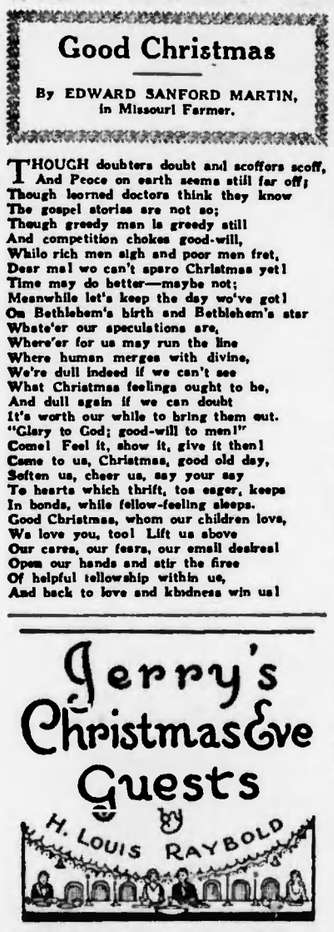
Good Christmas

By EDWARD SANFORD MARTIN, in Missouri Farmer.

THOUGH doubters doubt and scoffers scoff,
And Peace on earth seems still far off;
Though learned doctors think they know
The gospel stories are not so;
Though greedy men is greedy still
And competition chokes good-will,
While rich men sigh and poor men fret,
Dear me! we can't spare Christmas yet!
Time may do better—maybe not;
Meanwhile let's keep the day we've got!
On Bethlehem's birth and Bethlehem's star
Whate'er our speculations are,
Where'er for us may run the line
Where human merges with divine,
We're dull indeed if we can't see
What Christmas feelings ought to be,
And dull again if we can doubt
It's worth our while to bring them out.
"Glory to God; good-will to men!"
Come! Feel it, show it, give it then!
Came to us, Christmas, good old day,
Soften us, cheer us, say your say
To hearts which thrift, too eager, keeps
In bonds, while fellow-feeling sleeps.
Good Christmas, whom our children love,
We love you, too! Lift us above
Our cares, our fears, our small desires!
Open our hands and stir the fires
Of helpful fellowship within us,
And back to love and kindness win us!

Jerry's Christmas Eve Guests

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD



"JOLLY," said Jerry Blaine to his sister, "will you do me a little favor?"

"Possibly," drawled Molly. "What is it?"

"Well," began Jerry, "I want to give a little party on Christmas eve."

"Christmas eve! That's not a good night for a party, Jerry. People have a habit of being frightfully busy about their own affairs."

"Christmas eve it must be," insisted Jerry stubbornly.

"All right. Christmas eve it shall be, old obstinate. And I suppose the favor you're asking is my help on that most inconvenient of nights."

"Rather your presence, Molly. As a matter of fact, the guests to be are all unmarried."

"Why not have it here at the house?"

"Molly," said Jerry solemnly. "I already have that party planned down to the very last bonbon and the only place I can picture it is in the old home."

"How many are you asking, Jerry?"

"Seven," came the prompt reply. "Besides you, Peter and myself. A comfortable dinner party."

Jerry drove from his sister's straight back to the big square house that had been left jointly to Molly and himself.

Today he strode through the long living room to a small study where he picked up a tiny snapshot from his desk and addressed it tenderly. "Phyllis sweetheart," he murmured, "here's hoping my wild schemes won't go wrong!"

Molly hustled through the preparations for her own three youngsters, who had been put to bed unduly early, and flew into her party clothes. Peter was inclined to grumble over the whole business but Molly bore with him good-naturedly and carried him off in plenty of time.

Jerry flung wide the door at their ring.

Molly entering, stopped short. "How perfectly lovely!" she cried.

"I've been so busy with shopping, Jerry, that I've hardly seen you to ask what luck you have had with your guests."

Jerry drew down the corners of his mouth. "You were right," he said, "as always. Six absolutely could not see their way to come."

"That leaves—" began Molly.

"You and Peter, yours truly, and—Phyllis Rowe. You know she has no family at all."

Whatever comments his sister was about to make were not uttered, for at that moment the doorbell rang, and there stood Phyllis, a lovely vision in furs.

Molly, looking from Jerry to his pretty guest, was struck with a sudden thought. The two of them made a handsome pair.

After a truly typical Christmas feast, Jerry managed an aside with his sister as Peter was discussing a recent play with Phyllis.

"I Love You, Phyllis, and Want You for My Wife."

"Molly," he said persuasively, "coax Peter into the study and see if you can't stay there for a little. Run the radio, poke over my treasures, anything."

Then he turned to Phyllis. "Come," he invited, "let's sit by the fire and tell secrets. I'll tell mine first!" he promised.

"I love you, Phyllis," he said at last, "and I want you for my wife. I have imagined you again and again sitting here in just this way beside me. Have I any chance, dear?"

Phyllis did not speak for a moment and Jerry's heart sank like a plummet. Then, softly, there stole from the study the sweet strains of "Silent night, holy night."

Phyllis lifted her pansy eyes to Jerry's and laid her slender hand on the arm of his chair where it was instantly grasped. "Every chance in the world," she whispered.

Later, Molly took Jerry to task. "I believe," she said accusingly, "you asked those people on Christmas eve just hoping they wouldn't come."

Her brother looked sheepish. Then, "Right you are," he admitted. "I got an acceptance from Phyllis first, however, and gambled on the others being too busy."

"You're a fraud!" said Molly.

"Merry Christmas!" said Jerry.

The Man of the Hour

Fable of Link's One Large Day

By GEORGE ADE

(©, Bell Syndicate.)—WNU Service.

ONCE there was an Industrial Slave whose Name did not appear in the History of his Own Times. He cut no Ice except that he added a Grand Total of 1 to the Census Total. He was just another Passenger on the Trolley and another Pay Envelope on Saturday night and another Vote to be rounded up by the Precinct Captain. He was known to the Folks living Next Door and the Foreman remembered him from one Week to another and that is as far as his Fame ever spread. He wore Overalls and carried a Lunch Pail with a Cup inverted on the Top and pulled at a stubby Dudeen, which was about all of the Biographical Details available. Except that, being a Namesake of the great martyred President, he was commonly know as Link.

Nothing ever happened to him until he died and then he received as much worshipful Attention as ever was expended on a Crowned Head. He may have been a Mutt while he was breathing but the Moment he became cold he was a Prominent Citizen.

When he joined the Majority the bereaved Helpmate consulted the Bank Book, which showed a stingy Balance of $534. There was an unpaid Balance on the House and a Doctor Bill. Germany was well off as compared with Link's Family. However, a Sick Benefit had accrued from the Union.

So the poor bereaved Widow began to make arrangements for the Obsequies. She took all she had in sight and went into Debt as far as they would let her go and gave his Nobs one Whale of a Fare-Ye-well.

While Link was here He and the Missus used to go to the Mat about once so often. In fact, they averaged about three Armageddons a Day, with the Issue always in doubt, but the Moment he cashed in, she remembered him as a Male Turtle Dove who did nothing but Coo.

He was a Tough Bird while he had his Health but the Minute he breathed his Last he was Snow White.

Alive and Kicking: Dead—Can't Kick.

As soon as they began making the Arrangements it occurred to her that they did not have, in the principal, high-priced, aristocratic Cemetery, a Lot which was in keeping with the Social Prominence and Eminent Virtues of the Deceased.

So she sent for one of the Trustees of the Graveyard and he let her have a small Tract of Ground on a High Spot, commanding a good view, and all he charged her was about four times what she would pay for land at the corner of Fifth Avenue and 42nd Street.

After that she called in the Undertaker, who is a great help on such Occasions. He had a very beautiful Catalogue showing the different kinds of Caskets which might be purchased. He showed her some of the cheap ones but he very frankly admitted that possibly some of the Wood had Worm Holes in it and the Handles were not Sterling Silver, and, although he didn't want to influence her in any way, he suggested that she could not get anything which would be worthy of the Dear Departed unless she picked out something in the Back Part of the Book.

The Widow must have been in a very Sentimental Mood when she picked out the Metal Casket that let down in front, the same as a Kitchen Cabinet. It had a lot of Puffed Satin and was guaranteed to stand up and remain in Good Condition for a great many Years, which didn't make any Difference, but the Widow fell for it just the same. She wanted Link to have the Best of everything.

While he was alive, she would holler until you could hear her a Block away if he bought a Collar Button that cost as much as 50 Cents, but now that he was gone and had become one of the Angels, let us hope, she couldn't think of anything too Recherche for him. So she ordered the kind of Coffin which is favored by New York Millionaires and when she heard the Price was Eight Hundred Dollars she wasn't feazed a trifle.

Then the Undertaker took up with her the Important Matter of how they should attire Link before spreading him out. He said that the neatest and niftiest and slickest Costume for a Gentleman of Standing was a Tuxedo with Pearl Studs and Patent Leather Dancing Pumps. Than which nothing could have been more appropriate for Link.

Soprano Tried for Distance.

He not only never had worn a Lew Cody outfit but he never had seen one. What is more, it would have required a Posse of very determined Men to get Link into a Tuxedo but, of course, they had him counted out and lying Horizontal and the Widow was having her own Way, so she ordered, at a very high Price, a very beautiful Regalia suitable for one who is going to attend a Dinner Dance at the Ritz.

After they got Link into the Nobby Outfit it would be unfair to tell you that he looked different. If he ever appeared at the Gates of Heaven in the Masquerade Costume there is a Question as to whether or not Saint Peter would have identified him from the Description which had been received in Advance.

Quite a Question arose as to where the Funeral Services would be held. It would be necessary to have a Preacher and it was customary to break into a Church. It just happened that Link had not attended Church for something like a matter of 28 Years and he had no Sectarian Affiliations that anyone remembered, but his Wife happened to think that one of his Aunts had been a Methodist, so they fixed it up and had the Methodist Minister come over and he looked at the Remains and secured a few Data from the Bereaved Helpmate and by the time he got through Link was almost a Methodist in Good Standing.

The Pastor and the Undertaker told the Widow that it was customary, if you wanted to have a real Swell Funeral, to have some singing and that a good Soprano who was guaranteed to usher the Departing Soul right into the Blissful Beyond would bring about 50 Dollars.

Link's Wife said that nothing was too good for Him so they hired a near-opera Singer and she did three Obligatos at the church, her Idea evidently being to let them know in the World Beyond that Link was on his way, because she certainly was Loud. Fortunately Link could not hear her and did not know what it cost, so everything was all right.

Roping In the Relatives.

It seems that the Importance of a Funeral nowadays is gauged by the Number of Motor Cars which follow the Motor Hearse out to the Cemetery. All you have to do to get a Motor Hearse is to buy it and use it once and then give it back.

Link's wife wanted the Funeral to be a Real Success so she engaged all of the Automobiles from three Garages and had them lined up in front of the Church, so that all of the Mourners could get a Free Ride out to the Cemetery, with the result that a great many People who never had heard of Link rode out and stood beside the Open Grave and cried like Children.

We must not overlook the fact that Death Notices had been inserted in all of the Newspapers nearby and that Mrs. Link had sent for Link's Brother, who lived five hundred miles away and had paid his Railroad Fare and had bought a new Suit of Clothes so that they would let him enter the Church. All of this helped to whoop the Expense Account but there is one time when a Sentimental Woman will not balk at Expenses and that is when she is planting the Beloved.

It certainly was a most successful Funeral. Link's wife sent Flowers in her own name and in the Names of all of the Relatives who were not present. Link looked simply wonderful in his ballroom Costume and the Preacher talked about him until almost anybody could believe that Link amounted to something and the Soprano did herself proud and the Parade was about four blocks long and the Assembly out at the Cemetery looked like a Mass Meeting.

After it was all over, the Widow held a Consultation with the Children and checked up on the Family Budget. They had no Assets in sight but there were quite a number of Bills.

The Widow said, by way of Explanation, "It looks as though we would be broke for the next twenty years, but you must admit that we gave Papa quite a Send-Off."

MORAL—If people are overlooking you, die.

Forms of Government in European Countries

The following European nations are republics: Austria, Czechoslovakia, Esthonia, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Portugal, San Marino, Spain, Switzerland and Turkey. Russia is a federation of republics, but of republics of a sort quite different from the older kind.

The kingdoms are those of Belgium, Bulgaria, Denmark, Great Britain, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Rumania, the Serb, Croat and Slovene (Jugoslavia), and Sweden. The government of Hungary is also, in form, that of a kingdom, but the throne is vacant at present. Luxemburg is a grand duchy. Monaco is a principality.

Ireland and Danzig are called free states. In Danzig there is a legislative assembly, elected by the people, and a high commissioner, appointed by the League of Nations. In Ireland there is the sort of quasi-independent government that Canada has, with a very slight formal acknowledgment of the sovereignty of the British king.

THE REPUBLICAN

MT. LAKE PARK

Community Christmas Tree

Mountain Lake Park is to have a Community Christmas tree—it's first. The Mayor and Council, the M. E. church, Miss Huff and the citizens in general have joined hands to make the event outstanding. The Monongahela West Penn will donate its services in the light decorations. Rev. I. S. Middaugh will act at master of ceremonies. Miss Huff, who so ably directed the musical program last summer, will have charge of the music. There will be a chorus and singing of old time Christmas songs and carols. But to detail the program would be telling. Take the word of the writer, the entire affair will be worthy of a community much larger than this.

But this tree is not alone for the Park and Loch Lynn. Every community within comfortable driving distance is cordially invited to come and join in commemorating this holy festival.

The local Camp of the Woodmen of the World has arranged to distribute hundreds of packages of food-stuff and the kiddies will not be forgotten by Santa. He will be there in person with candies, oranges and such like. And then any one who may desire may hang presents for friends on the tree and have them distributed by Santa.

The tree will be lighted on the grounds of Brachorn, Christmas Eve The hour, 6:30 to 7:30. This is one time when those in charge are hoping that the snow will remain until after Saturday.

Those who have a desire to see what is in vacant cottages are advised to watch their step. Much complaint has been registered in the past concerning vacant houses being entered and valuable articles carried away. Citizens in charge of summer residents are evidently more watchful. The other evening two men were seen acting as though they were about to enter a cottage, when the man in charge opened fire with a revolver. The next time he may not miss. Tracks in the snow give a strong suspicion of the guilty parties.

Local weather prophets have gone 'haywire.' Marvin Harmison raised the hopes of the writer by saying he knew it would be a mild winter because of the lack of color, or perhaps it was because of the stripes on the caterpillar. Upton Cuppett added to our anticipated enjoyment by saying there would be several snows, but they would not remain long. We hate to have our hopes shattered and our faith in caterpillars destroyed. But we must believe our senses.

The water supply has been greatly reduced during this cold snap by the habit of leaving the water run at night to prevent freezing. The water company threatens to shut off the water of those leaving spigots open at night. The plumbers have been quite busy thawing out and repairing pipes. And we imagine housewives have added some new words to their vocabulary.

Mrs. F. O. Fouch, of the Park, was taken to Memorial Hospital Friday for a tonsil operation, which was performed that day and she returned to her home on Sunday.

Misses Helen Leighton and Virginia Weeks, of Loch Lynn are home for the holidays from Bowling Green, Ky., and will remain with their parents during the holiday season.

Mrs. Charles A. Oswell is recovering from an illness of several days.

Mr. Harland Biggs, of the University of Maryland, will spend the holidays with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Biggs.

The Baptist Sunday school will give a play entitled "The Christmas Voice," in the Baptist church, Loch Lynn, Friday night at 7:30 o'clock.

Miss Ruth Ream, Miss Edith Ream and Elmus Ream will spend the holidays with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Ream.

Mrs. Robert Dowman and small son, Bobby, of Cumberland, are the guests of Mrs. Dowman's mother, Mrs. J. P. Calhoun.

There will be preaching in the Baptist church, Loch Lynn, Sunday morning at 11 o'clock.

BITTINGER

It is our wish that in the homes of the readers of The Republican, the home of the editor and all his staff and helpers, the merriest Christmas cheer may come and abide and in the hearts of all of them the Spirit of the season may come and abide throughout the year and all the years beyond.

The snow storm continuing throughout Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week, covered the earth beneath a beautiful white blanket, but the blanket was jostled into drifts in the roadways so that traffic was temporarily halted in this section of the county.

On Friday morning the temperature stood some degrees below zero, varying from four to ten, according to locality. The weather continued cold throughout Friday and Saturday, but moderated somewhat on Sunday.

Late last Saturday night the large barn on the Ridgeley farm, near Beavansville, was consumed by fire, the source of which is unknown. Most of the live stock was saved from the flames, but feed and implements were all destroyed.

Snow blocked roads were responsible for a scarcity of Christmas tree venders in this community last week.

The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Clark Brenneman, seriously ill all of last week, is reported slightly improved at this writing.

Turkey raisers find the price offered for their birds most unsatisfactory this Christmas season.

EXTENSION WORKERS GIVE ANNUAL ACTIVITY REPORT

Outlook For Agriculture Promising With Great Opportunity In Potato Industry Here

WOMEN REPORT PROGRESS

Cooperation and assistance in many problems of rural life with definite signs of advancing along agricultural lines, are listed in the annual reports of John H. Carter, county agent, and Miss Margaret K. Burtis, home demonstration agent, sent to the Extension Department, University of Maryland, this week.

Subjects covered by Mr. Carter included cereals, legumes, forage crops, potatoes, special crops, home gardens, beautification, fruits, forestry, rodents and insects, agricultural engineering, poultry, dairy, livestock, farm management and marketing and community actlvities.

Those of Miss Burtis covered foods, clothing, house furnishings and beautification of homes and gardens.

"The outlook for agriculture is promising," Mr. Carter states in his report. "Country farming is so diversified that failure of one commodity does not mean ruination. The potato industry offers a great opportunity for commercial and certified seed growers to place on the market a product equal or superior to any grown in the northern or western states. The maple sugar industry is small but offers splendld opportunity, as does buckwheat flour.

"Garrett county is favorable to the raising of sheep and beef cattle, and is favorably located for producing and selling young dairy stock Its worth as a recreational center is also rapidly becoming known far and wide."

In Mr. Carter's summary, the following figures are listed: Extension work carried on in 15 communities; two new 4-H clubs formed during 1932, making a total of seven with 104 members, 85 of whom completed their projects.

Number of visits, 682; calls at office,

Thieves Enter Laundry and Escape With Quantity of Clothing

Several suits of clothing and an overcoat were stolen from the NuWay Laundry last Friday night by someone unknown to the officers. Entrance to the building was gained through a rear door, and although officers are working on the case and have several under suspicion, no arrests have been made. Mr. Johnson's loss will be around $100.

The same evening an overcoat belonging to Guy Yutzy was stolen from a parked automobile, while from the car belonging to Lester Yutzy, which was parked near the Evans garage on Alder street, two card tables and a number of other articles intended for Christmas gifts, were stolen. Three doors of the car were locked and it was early evening. No trace of the stolen goods has been found.

Christmas Observed With Usual Services Here

Christmas was observed in Oakland with usual services and entertainments in the various churches, with weather having more the appearance of an Easter day than a mid-winter one.

While it was not warm enough to eat out under the trees, yet, doors were opened and the entire day was spring-like.

While none of the merchants stocked their stores heavily for the Christmas season, practically all of them report a satisfactory business during that perlod, with more sane buying than in former years.

The spirit of Chrlstmas was shown in Oakland by its community and curb Chrlstmas trees, and the many outside and window decoratlons of the homes of its citizens.

NEW COST CUTS SOUGHT BY TWO MORE COUNTIES

Garrett and Washington Counties Depending on General Assembly for Further Slashes

TAXES PARED LAST YEAR

Two Western Maryland counties—Garrett and Washington—having lowered their tax rates for 1932-1933, now are depending on legislation by the General Assembly to make further reductlons in their local expenditures during 1933-1934, the presidents of their boards of County Commissioners said Monday.

The rate in Garrett county for its fiscal year 1931-1932 was $1.77 per $100, and for this year it $1.60. In Washington county the 1931-1932 rate was $1.45, and last June was dropped to $1.35.

Slashed Its Expenses

Garrett county's 17-cent cut in the rate was effected by a general slash in all county expenditures, but without lowering salaries, except those of the janitor in the courthouse, according to George D. Browning, president of the commissioners' board.

"We hope we will be able to cut our tax rate further next year, but this will have to be done by the Legislature—We can't cut our county government much more," he said.

Wants Aid From State

"We hope the Legislature will give the county some of the gasoline tax to maintain our roads—either let the State Roads Commission take them over or turn the money over to the County Commissioners—and we also would like to see the State give additional school aid. This would mean cutting both of these items in our tax bills."

Mr. Browning said the county expended $14,000 during 1931-1932 from its paupers' fund for unemployment relief. This year $8,000 was appropriated, but will not be enough, he said, and a deficit will be met out of the county's contingent fund.

Monthly Pay Roll $1,500

Jesse J. Ashby, Jr., Garrett county treasurer, said the county had about fifteen full-time employes and that the county pay roll each month, exclusive of schools, was about $1,500.

Garrett county, on the figures of its taxable basis for 1931-1932, was the sixteenth wealthiest county in the State. Its basis then was $22,437,650, but has declined approximately $600,000 since then, according to Mr. Browning.

$332,446 In Revenue

The $1.77 rate for 1931-1932 produced revenue of $332,446, of which $139,020 was allocated to schools, in addition to $194,707 in State aid for the same purpose. Road expenditures amounted to $38,715, for debt service $19,250 was spent and $135,461 for other governmental purposes.

Garrett county has an area of approximately 665 square miles and its population is about 20,000. It has approximately 790 miles of the county road.

Washington county, the fourth county in the State in taxable wealth, suffered a decline of approximately $1,000,000 in its taxable basis when it prepared for the levy of 1932-1933, according to William H. Cunningham, president of its county board.

CHILD KILLED ALIGHTING FROM BUS LAST THURSDAY

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Beachy Is Struck By Automobile Near Grantsville

JURY EXONERATES DRIVER

Allghting from a school bus near her grandparents' home, Dorothy Jane Beachy, eight-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Beachy, of near Avilton, this county, was struck by an automobile and instantly kill at 4:15 o'clock last Thursday afternoon on the National Highway, three miles west of Grantsville. The grandparents of the little girl was Mr. and Mrs. Joel A. Beachy, prominent residents of Election District No. 3.

The driver of the car, Harry O. Younkin, of Grantsville, was exonerated by a coroner's jury, following an inquest conducted at Grantsville at which State's Attorney Walter W. Dawson and State Trooper Miller, representing the commonwealth, were in attendance. Gilead Broadwater was foreman of the jury which found that the accident was apparently unavoidable.

The child attended the primary department in the Grantsvllle school and had been living with her grandparents during the past several months. The school bus, operated by Scott Duckworth, and owned by the Keyser's Ridge Garage, had stopped in front of the Beachy home, a regular stopping place for the vehicle to discharge and take on school children. The child had alighted from the bus and had started across the highway when the Ford car driven by Younkin struck her. The child's body was carried a distance of 116 feet on the fender and bumper of the car before it fell to the roadway and the automobile, according to witnesses, went an additional distance of 75 feet before it was brought to a stop by the driver.

Dr. N. R. Davis, of Grantsville, who was summoned to make an examination of the body by the jury, stated that the child suffered instant death. Her skull was fractured and her legs and arms were shattered by the force of the impact.

As soon as Younkin stopped his car he took the child's body to Grantsville. His uncle, Elmer Younkin, was in the car with him. They had been visiting in the Cove and were returning home when the accident occurred. The machine was owned by Younkin's uncle, George A. Younkin.

Besides the child's parents and her grandparents, she is survived by several brothers and sisters. A brother, who was also a passenger on the bus, witnessed the accident.

Historic Plantings Should Be Reported to Civic Club

The importance of reporting to the Civic club the number of walnut trees planted, was emphasized this morning by a member of the club, who urged that all who had received the historic nuts for planting give an accounting as soon as the work was accomplished.

This is urged so that the county and state will receive the proper credit and recognition for the Bicentennial year.

There are still a few more nuts available for historic planting and may be obtained by notifying a member of the Civic club. The Oakland Boy Scout troop has secured two sites in town on which they expect to plant a number of these nuts.

OAKLAND FIREMEN TRIM BAYARD IN CLOSE BATTLE

Rally in Closing Minutes Nets 8 Points to Clinch Contest.

A desperate rally in the last four minutes of play, which netted eight points while holding their opponents scoreless, enabled the Oakland Firemen to defeat Bayard Monday night in the Oakland High gymnasium 36 to 32.

The game was close throughout, the periods ending 8 to 9, 16 to 17, and 26 to 25. Bayard then put on a spurt and was leading Oakland 32 to 28 but their lead was cut down in the closing minutes.

Joe Rice, with nine field goals, led the Oakland scoring while Blackburn, with five field goals, and Funk, with four field goals and one foul, led the scoring for Bayard.

A good sized crowd witnessed the contest.

The lineup and summary:

Defeated By Thomas Aces

Oakland Firemen lost their second game of the season to the Thomas Aces at Thomas last night, 65 to 44. The game was fast throughout, a total of 109 points being made in forty minutes of play.

The first quarter ended 19 to 19, but after that Oakland drifted behind.

A return match will be played with Thomas next Wednesday evening in the Oakland High auditorium.

TAX REDUCTION DISCUSSED AT MEETING YESTERDAY

Seven Point Program For Reduction of Taxes Advocated After Several Hour Session

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

Advocating a seven-point program whereby taxes might be reduced, about 350 citizens of Garrett county met yesterday morning and afternoon in the Maryland Theatre and discussed proposed legislation to be presented at the next session of the General Assembly of Maryland.

William Miller, of Accident, as chairman of the meeting, asked that the State assume a greater responsibility in bearing the tax burden and advocated a reduction in the salary of all State officials.

He cited how the county commissioners had met and discussed proposed legislation leading to a reduction of the school tax rate and the allocation of a portion of the gasoline tax, to be used on the county roads, and he concurred in their views of these matters.

Harvey J. Speicher, also of Accident, advocated the elimination of truant officers, supervisors, etc., in the school system and salary reductions of all State officials. He also pointed out that if one-half of the money raised by the gasoline tax was diverted to the schools the mandatory levy of 67 cents now in effect would be reduced to the 30-cent figure recommended by the county commissioners at their recent meeting in Annapolis, and would create no additional burden on the taxpayers of the counties or of Baltimore City.

The meeting was then opened for discussion. Harry Porter was elected secretary of the meeting, and E. S. Evans, of Terra Alta, was called upon to give his views, which were in line with statements of the previous speakers, except that he advocated an even greater reduction in the salaries of public officials.

The resolutions as presented included the following recommendations which will be transmitted to the legislative members for their consideration:

Amendment of the local liquor fine law which now requires that one-half of the money be used for the purchase of law books for the Court library at the Court House, and directing that instead this money be paid to the county commissioners to be used for county purposes.

Repeal of the law requiring the county commissioners to pay a bounty for foxes, wildcats and weasels.

Amending the law regulating the salary of the county commissioners, placing it at $1,000, with no pay for mileage.

Fixing salary of State's Attorney at $1,500, with no allowance for expen-

Legion to Make Drive for Relief of Needy

A relief drive has been planned by the local post of the American Legion, and the materlal gathered will be used for distributlon among the needy.

"The drive is not for money particularly," Edward C. Lawrence, a member of the committee, stated, "but for clothing, food, and anything that might be used to better the conditions of those people who have been unfortunate."

The present plan calls for cards to be placed at a number of stores, with a small box nearby. People having any clothing, food, etc., will write their names and addresses on the card. These cards will be collected at stated perlods, and automobiles will traverse the town gathering the material. Members of the Oakland Boy Scout troop will assist in gathering the donations. It is planned to begin the drive about the first of the year.

Capital Refused To Hear Defense of Man Exonerated In Lincoln Plot

By David Rankin Barber, in the Baltimore Sunday Sun, Dec. 25, 1932.

It was Washingtons proud boast that it was the most loyal city in the country in the terrible Civil War days. At least that is what the correspondents were saying in 1870 when the last movement was under way to remove the capital to some other location. The most brilliant of these writing gentlemen, Donn Piatt, of Ohio, cried with joy over the fact that President Lincoln walked unmolested about the streets of the Capital while he had to go in disguise through Pennsylvania and Maryland. And it pleased him—a Northern abolitionist—that the city he loved above all others, although a Southern community, did not revolt and join the Confederacy. No Washingtonian, he said, was involved in the assassination of the President. And that was literally true.

But there was a time, after the war, when Washington herself did not agree with the gay and festive Piatt, when many of her citizens believed that a citizen of the community was enmeshed in that awful crime—so deeply, they felt, that even after his acquittal he was not allowed to reside there; nor was he allowed to speak there at a time when all feeling growing out of the crime was supposed to have evaporated. This was John H. Surratt, the son of the widow who was hanged for the assassination, though as innocent as a lamb.

When Surratt was arrested in Egypt, whence he had fled from the Papal states, and brought to this country, tried and found not guilty, he went immediately to Maryland, his birthplace, and there engaged in business. For awhile he sold merchandise and then entered the tobacco business in Baltimore. Two years later he set up in Rockville as a school teacher, and, after a year at that occupation, he wrote a lecture on his connection with John Wilkes Booth, his participation in Booth's plot to kidnap Mr. Lincoln, his experiences as a Confederate spy, his mission to Canada, his mother's trial and his reasons for not coming to Washington to save her from the gallows.

It was an ill-advised adventure, as he speedily learned; and his lecture was not of a character to win him sympathy. As it turned out neither the North nor the South would hear him, but nowhere did he get such a reception as in Washington. Here a mob prevented his appearance and the Mayor advised him, for the good of the community, not to undertake it.

One thing, perhaps, deceived him, and that was the ovation he received from the people of Rockville. They came out in force to his lecture, being drawn by a rather bizarre advertisement which read as follows:

"Lecture by John H. Surratt—On Tuesday evening, December 6th, 1870, John H. Surratt will deliver a lecture in the court-house in Rockville on his introduction to John Wilkes Booth—the plot for the abduction of President Lincoln—Its failure and abandonment—His trip to Richmond and from thence to Canada—Then by orders to Elmora, and what was done there—His hearing of the assassination of President Lincoln—His escape back into Canada and concealment there—The efforts of the detectives to arrest him and means used to baffle them—His final departure for Europe—Doors open at 6½ o'clock and Lecture commences at 7. Admittance 50 cents; children half-price."

Only one newspaper, the Washington Star, it seems, had a reporter present. He rode twenty miles to the theatre, took a stenographic report of it and his paper gave up the whole of the front page to it the next afternoon. The "enterprising" correspondents in the Press Gallery tore the first page out of the Star that afternoon and either wired the lecture complete to their papers or mailed the sheet in, for it was published in full in most of the city papers of the West and North. This "beat" has hardly been excelled since Washington was Washington, except by the reporter for the New York Herald, who, with Mrs. Lincoln's conniving, procured from the printer a copy of Mr. Lincoln's first inaugural address and sent it to his paper, which printed it before it was delivered. This enterprising young man went to jail rather than betray the source of his information; but Mrs Lincoln soon got him out of prison. She seemed to have some influence with Mr. Lincoln; if not with him, then with Marshal Lamon, the jailer, who was her friend.

When the Star reporter reached Rockville he found "the village . . deserted of everything save horses and empty vehicles of all kinds, from a sulky to a cord-wood wagon, the occupants of which had passed into the courtroom, the scene of the lecture." Within that venerable pile a curious spectacle was presented. "The bar was occupied by ladies in large numbers, while without and high up around the walls, on crier's bench, and elsewhere men and boys held every available seat."

Surratt entered unaccompanied. The Rockville Cornet Band greeted him with a lively air and he threw off his overcoat and revealed a manuscript book, "which he drew from under his arm and laid open on the desk before him.' His lecture was "well in memory," however, and so without any sort of introduction he began to reel it off, "speaking very rapidly and distinctly for an hour and a quarter." His voice was good and his delivery easy, but occasionally he exhibited much warmth of feeling, "particularly when he referred to his mother, and his alleged desertion of her in her darkest hour."

All through the lecture he was given hearty applause and often cheered and at its conclusion the band played "Dixie," a concert was improvised, "the audience not separating until a late hour." During the reception "Surratt was quite a lion with the ladies present."

One other Washington newspaper, the National Republican, took notice of the lecture, publishing it in full two days after it was delivered, and with a sympathetic introduction also. "His lecture stands among the remarkable stories of the time," said this journal. Moreover, the Republican praised the lecture editorially as being "a unique narrative altogether"; and said that Surratt cleared up "many points upon which we were hitherto left in the dark. It will be read with much interest, as it relates to a matter which can hardly ever lose its terribly fascinating hold upon the American mind."

Had Surratt come to Washington then he would, no doubt, have been unmolested and have been greeted by a large audience. But he made the fatal mistake of going to New York, to lecture in Cooper Institute, where Lincoln, ten years before, had delivered one of his most famous addresses. In his Rockville lecture, Surratt had asserted that his innocence was so clearly established in his own mind that while in Canada he wrote out his defense and gave it to a friend to send to the New York World. This reference to the great Democratic journal, which was more or less under suspicion all during the war, deeply incensed that paper, and it led an attack on him which made his lecture on the evening of December 9 a failure.

On his first appearance, at Rockville, Surratt began his lecture by saying that the only motive which brought him on the stage was gain; he needed money, and he hoped to make a lot of it with his lecture. Indeed, he had a regular manager and press agent. This did not escape the World or other papers, which fell on the poor young man with an almost insensate hatred.

"The sister of the mythical Mrs. Harris eked out her substance by exhibiting her infant 'kep' in spirits in a bottle," said the World. "The son of the late Mrs. Surratt is making his living by hawking his mother's corpse. The pleasing Mr. Surratt has certainly managed to remove the imputation of cowardice which recently rested upon him. It requires great courage, of its kind, for a man to make a market of his knowledge of a transaction of which the chief interest, so far as he is concerned, resides in the fact that his mother was done to a violent and shameful death by it. But the courage implied by such an exhibition is not an alluring kind. It is simply the most flagrantly and deliberately indecent method of making money which has ever occurred in the depraved human mind. . . . It is hoped that self-respecting persons will refrain from becoming his auditors."

This editorial, it is plain on its face, was written for the purpose of clearing the skirts of the World of any imputation of friendly contact with John H Surratt. But the World was not more severe than other New York papers, which fell in line with it and "wrote down" the effort of the young man to gain an audience in the chief city of the country. Hear old Horace Greeley, for instance, in the Tribune:

"The pirate of Alabama must look to his laurels as a lecturer, for a new and formidable rival has appeared in the Southern Lyceums. How tame and uninviting the exploits of Semmes in burning defenseless ships will appear compared to the thrilling tales of John H. Surratt's adventures as a spy, conspirator and assassin. This fellow has had the effrontery to detail before a Southern audience—monstrous fact that such an audience could be assembled!—his connection with the conspirators who assassinated Mr. Lincoln. He denies, of course, that he agreed to assassination, for that confession would hang him, but in his Cooper Institute lecture and in an article in another New York paper. "I don't knew that I have ever given offense to the World," he said in the lecture, "except that I had the supreme audacity to bring its name into my lecture." And in his article he said that he had been informed by a leading politician of New York "that the reason of the World's assault is that the Democracy of New York is so rotten and in such a critical condition that it was obliged to repudiate him to save itself." He concluded his sharp reply by stating: "I will not be deterred from my course by the howlings and carpings of those who would be my friends if they dared."

From New York Surratt went to Baltimore, where he lingered for a fortnight and then lectured in Concordia Opera House on the coldest night of the winter. This time, too, his audience was small—about 250 persons—but most enthusiastic.

Even while he spoke, however, another enemy lay in wait. It was the United States Government, which, having failed to convict him of the crime of assassination, now stood at the door of the theatre, in the person of the United States Marshal, with a warrant for his arrest on the charge of selling tobacco without a revenue license. For nine days he had been in Baltimore, unmolested. On the following day he was booked to appear in Washington. If placed in jail in Baltimore, he could not get to Washington

The marshal said he knew nothing of the charge; that the warrant had been made out on information from the deputy collector. Surratt's friends, highly indignant, routed the United States Commissioner and Surratt's lawyer out of bed and secured his release on a bond signed by the lawyer. The ufortunate young man protested his innocence; denied that he had ever sold leaf tobacco; said that he had procured a revenue license from this same deputy collector to engage in the wholesale trade. When the case came to trial, several months later, it was thrown out of court. It was a piece of malicious, petty persecution.

Surratt came to Washington to find a pretty kettle of fish cooked up for him. His agent had written on from New York to secure Lincoln Hall for his lecture, and had paid down $75 in cash for it. The authorities controlling that hall revoked the permit and Surratt's agent then secured Odd Fellows' Hall; but on the day before the lecture the governing board forced him to cancel that lease.

Corbyn, Surratt's agent, then went to see Father Walter, of St. Patrick's Church, who was Mrs. Surratt's spiritual adviser and the most intimate friend of the family, and the priest advised him "to persuade Surratt from appearing in public here." Instead of doing this Corbyn engaged Carusi's Hall, "determined to have the lecture anyhow." His efforts to see Mayor Emery, to procure police protection—the rumors of mob action having reached his ears—proved unavailing.

At 5 o'clock on the afternoon of December 30, when the lecture was to be given, the Mayor himself called upon Corbyn and told him that he had a petition from over 300 reputable citizens protesting against Surratt's lecture The Mayor handed Corbyn this letter:

Mayor's Office, City Hall.
Washington, D. C., December 30, 1870.

J. H. Surratt—Sir—It is announced in the papers of today that you are to lecture this evening at Odd Fellows' Hall. Learning from various sources that there is great opposition to your lecturing in Washington city upon the subject proposed, and if you attempt it, fearing it may cause trouble. I would earnestly advise you, officially, to desist from your purpose and withdraw your appointment to lecture.

Respectfully yours,
M. G. EMERY, Mayor.

That night a crowd gathered in front of Carusi's Hall, waiting for the doors to open. "They seemed to avoid proximity to the hall door and to resist all efforts at recognition," said the Star, "but moved about restlessly, now separating into small knots, and then gathering into solid groups, like the contents of a kaleidescope. This might or might not indicate trouble ahead." Police reserves were held in line at the Central Guard House under arms, and detectives moved quickly and firmly through the milling crowd. The hall was lighted up and pretty soon carriages began to drive up, but the occupants did not alight. At 8 o'clock the lights were put out, and with them John H. Surratt's lecturing career.

After the Washington episode, there was an immediate reaction throughout the country in Surratt's favor. "If the young man has anything to say, let him speak," said the New York Standard, commenting Uriah-Heepishly on the Washington incident. "The danger with men of this class is that they are made into martyrs. . . Now, if there had been any trouble about a hall (here), or any opposition from whatver cause, Surratt would have had an enormous business, with, perhaps, a quiet, old-fashioned Astor Place riot."

This incident closed Surratt's career on the public stage. He went back to Baltimore and secured a position with one of the steamship lines and for fifty years was in their employ, rising to the trusted position of auditor. His brother, Isaac, got employment with the same company at the same time and died in its service. Miss Anna Surratt, their sister, married the celebrated chemist and scientist, Prof. R. B. Tonry. They all lived quiet and peaceful and honorable lives in that city and died of ripe, old age, John Surratt and Mrs. Tonry leaving behind them many worthy descendants.

During his long life Surratt toiled incessantly over his book of reminiscences, in which he set down in full the story of his participation in the Booth plot to kidnap Lincoln, his own subsequent career and his mother's life history and innocence. When he was retired on a pension he began the revision of his manuscript. A newspaper offered him $25,000 for the serial rights, after one of its editors had read it. One day, toward the end of his mortal career, his wife saw him coming from the cellar, in the summer time, and presently she noticed a curling smoke issuing from the furnace vent. The venerable old man had burnt his precious book.

TAKE INVENTORY OF SELF, IS ADVICE OF DR. RILEY

Important to Take Stock of Physical Assets and Liabilities

At the close of the old year, and looking forward to 1933, Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the State Department of Health, reminds Marylanders that this is inventory time and that it is quite as important to "take stock" of one's physical assets and liability as it is of one's financial resources.

"We would not think of running our automobiles," Dr. Riley said, "without having them thoroughly gone over, every now and then. But we neglect to have this very important thing done to the wonderful human mechanism we carry around with us in our bodies. We ean buy spare parts for our automobiles—engines, batteries, wires, all the rest of the paraphernalia that goes into the making of a serviceable car. When the heart, the kidneys, the nervous system, or other parts of the human machine show signs of wear and tear, we can't replace them with new ones. But we can find out how to take care of our human mechanism, so that we ean conserve and prolong its usefulness.

"One of the best ways to do this is for each person to go to his or her doctor, at regular intervals, for a thorough medical inspection of the human machine. If a weak spot has developed in some part of the system, very often the doctor can advise as to ways by which the encroaching weakness or disease can be checked.

"What somebody has called the principal 'life shorteners' are what are also known as the degenerative diseases of middle age. Diseases of the heart, the kidneys, cerebral hemorrhage, cancer and diabetes are in this group. Tuberculosis belongs to another class, but it is a 'life shortener' also. Nearly all of these diseases have slow beginnings, long before their effects are noticed. By having an early diagnosis and by following the doctor's advice, a great deal can be accomplished—not only for the conditions referred to, but for many others—both in prolonging life and in prolonging it for healthy usefulness.

"The boys and girls who are growing up today are getting accustomed to these periodical examinations thru the regular inspections they have in school. And every young mother knows that the best way to keep her baby and her other young children well is by having them under regular medical supervision.

"So, it is the grown-ups who need this advice, and I urge each individual who has not had an examination recently, to begin the New Year by following the custom of the wide awake motorist. Go to your doctor for a thorough examination of your human machine. Have him check up on all parts of the machine. Then do as he tells you to do."

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

". . . . and a little child shall lead us"

WE'RE Pinning our faith on pinafores—on the bright new year fresh from the beak of the stork. What he is, we know—a new chance; what he will grow up into we can only hope—a prosperous old man. However, he is soon to arrive and in that momentous occasion alone we rejoice. He is a youngster in a world grown heavy with weariness and depression, but like all youngsters he has the gift of cheering the tired and brings with him an aura of bright days ahead.

HE Is the little child that shall lead us into better times. "Happy New Year" is his name and we extend a welcome to him. We hope that he will be kind to you in every way that you wish. We hope that he will bring a new dawn of happiness and prosperity to all those who are so in need of it. We hope that he will convince the world that there is only one way to get on top, and that is through cooperation, not only between nations, but also between neighbors.

MR. ROOSEVELT SHOUD CO-OPERATE

Here at the turn of the year, as the business of the world hesitates ominously between revival and further decline, it is scarcely to be wondered at that impatience mounted against Governor Roosevelt for his first refusal of all cooperation with Mr. Hoover.

The general public has scant interest in methods. There is no great love left for the Hoover "commission." On the other hand, there can be little confidence that a settlement negotiated by diplomates would be accepted by Congress. The word is action—prompt, summary, plenary—and anyone who obstructs or delays is certain to be visited by popular wrath.

A decision before March 4 is not within the relm of probability. The ultimate fate of the debts must of necessity be left to Mr. Roosevelt's judgment. But there is no shadow of reasonable excuse why the preliminary task of study and negotiations should not begin forthwith and an accord thus made possible soon after Mr. Roosevelt takes office.

Mr. Roosevelt took a firm stand against a commission created by Congress, and that is no longer under discussion. What Mr. Hoover is now urging upon Mr. Roosevelt is an executive commission to negotiate a settlement precisely as would any other diplomatic agency of the executive. Following many precedents, the President might well place upon it a Senator or a Representative or both. But the method would be precisely that urged by Governor Roosevelt, an exercise of the diplomatic functions of the Presidency.

The details are unimportant. The commission could be large or small. But surely, if the will to cooperate exists on the Governor's part, there can be no possible excuse for a failure to adjust the views in issue. There has been criticism of Mr. Hoover for a supposed lack of tact in communicating with Congress without first securing Governor Roosevelt's assent. But to make tact an excuse for delay in the present emergency is to reveal a complete blindness to the treasure at stake.

We have never been greatly impressed by the arguments which have stressed the purely financial aspects of the debts. On the other hand, we do not see how anyone can fail to be profoundly impressed by the psychological factors involved. Certainly, at the earliest possible moment, lies at the heart of recovery in England and in Europe. In our judgment, no one factor would count as heavily in this direction as the news published from Washington that Mr. Hoover and Mr. Roosevelt had struck hands and would cooperate forthwith in the negotiation of a debt settlement.

We hope greatly that the reports are correct and that Governor Roosevelt is reconsidering his stand. Every day, every hour that is lost adds to the burden of depression under which the world is staggering. The country will rightly be slow to forgive any delay that flows from psrtisanship or personal pride.—New York Herald Tribune.

THE BUY AMERICA MOVEMENT

Officials of the importers association are beginning to sit up and take notice of the way the "Buy America" movement is growing over the United States. The default of certain European nations on their debt payments has given impetus to the movement.

The importer-propagandists gave vent to the old bogey that was raised during the fight on the Smoot-Hawley tariff—to the effect that if we participate as a nation in a movement to buy goods made only in America, foreign countries will retaliate. The import-guild fails to take cognizance of the fact that the movement of buying at home started in Europe and that in Great Britain it has grown so alrtight that newspapers, magazines and billboards are full of it. British subjects are spending their vacations on the English channel instead of the Mediterranean coast, and wherever possible are buying only British produced goods. The movement over there has grown to fine proportions. The other day the newspapers carried a cable dispatch that tobasco sauce has been placed on the blacklist because it has to be imported. Tobasco—that is, real tobasco—comes principally from Louisiana, and it is to be expected that the Honorable Huey Long will take due notice of this attack on his sovereign state.

But why shouldn't British people spend their money at home and why shouldn't people in America do the same thing? The old argument about the ten per cent of our production which goes abroad being more important than the ninety per cent we use at home is growing pretty thin. If the American industries could have the difference between what they sold at home in 1929 and what they sold in 1932 most of them would be willing to forget all about exports. But if the wishes of the import-bund were followed we would turn over our great home market in the expectancy of getting a market abroad which exists only in the fertile imaginations of the gentlemen who are seeking to get imported goods into America at a profit to themselves.

Let us by all means have foreign trade, but let it be built up not at the expense of the American producer. More than fifty per cent of our imports now come to Amcrica duty free. This talk about a tariff wall having been built around America is all bunk. Maybe we would be better off if we had such a wall. At any rate the depreciation of foreign currency has destroyed what protection the American producer had, in many lines, and we need some sort of a barrier until the world money is stabilized. To say that this could be brought about by buying abroad and throwing the rest of our labor out of jobs, is a little too thick to go down. Outside of the die-hard theoretical free traders, only one who expected to profit financially by flooding the country with foreign goods would advance it.

A paragraph or two from a recent issue of the soundly American Saturday Evening Post very tersely sums up the situation with regard to the Buy-America movement:

"England, France and Germany have their internal troubles and dissensions, but when there is an external threat against their trade or their prestige, Englishmen line up shoulder to shoulder for England, Frenchmen for France, Germans for Germany. This is as it should be, for it is the plain duty of every man to consider his own fireside and his own country first. European countries are national to the core where their own affairs are concerned, and are internationalists solely for a national advantage. Only a mind of sugar-plum sweetness could arrive at a different conclusion on surveying the European scene. . . .

"America must tighten her lines, not by way of reprisal but for self-protection. Europe has made the game; two can play it. Think America, buy America."

IN DAYS OF OLD

FORTY YEARS AGO

Charles F. White, merchant of Hutton, was bitten in the calf of his leg by a vicious dog which he attempted to chase out of his store. The wound was painful and it was cauterized by Dr. Shaffer, of Terra Alta.

A letter from Krug, Garrett county, described the town as follows: "A manufacturing town on the Yough River between Selbysport and Sang Run. Streets laid out and paved by John Conn April 4, 1892. Inhabitants sociable and intelligent; ladies most amiable."

The mercury was down to 16 degrees below zero on December 27.

Ice cutting began on the lake at Mountain Lake Park where a large number of men found employment.

Christmas was observed as usual in Oakland with programs at all the churches and treats for the Sunday school children.

Jones and Oreutt, who had a large stave mill located at a point on the West Union road, began shipping their product.

The marriage of Josiah G. Friend and Miss Mary Jane Sweitzer was announced. They were then and are still residents of the Swanton community.

TWENTY YEARS AGO

One case of smallpox was reported in Deer Park and one case in Friendsville, both of which were at once quarantined.

A dance was held in the First National Bank building and attended by nearly every young couple in the town and community.

During the year 1912 marriage licenses were issued to 711 couples.

One of the stormiest days of the year was experienced with a heavy fall of snow accompanied by a strong wind, blocking all the highways at certain points.

In Cumberland yesterday morning a Negro youth attempted to rob the B. & O. ticket office. He was arrested.

Seeking The Limelight

By J. A. HALL

One thing which we all notice is the persistence with which certain individuals manage to keep themselves in the public spotlight. It was said of a certain politician, well known a few years ago, that he loved horses, hunting, good liquor and—publicity. To this man, who had adopted politics as a career, publicity was a valuable asset. Favorable publicity was his chief stock in trade and he devised many ways by which his personality, his picture or his printed name would be kept constantly in the public eye. He, very naturally, preferred to be presented to the newspaper readers of the state in a laudatory way, but he held to the belief that adverse publicity was more valuable than none, and he was charged with having induced certain persons to assail him bitterly in the public press in order that he might have the opportunity of making a smashing reply. Keeping in the limelight is such an important factor in political success that some men give valuable time, effort and money in aiding various movements because these movements have the favorable consideration of a large number of people. Many men have succeeded in winning the affectionate regard of their fellow-citizens and been kept in office for long periods of time, not because of their qualifications as statesmen, but because they were good entertainers and able to make masses of people feel a certain comradeship with them. Bob Taylor's singing and fiddling and Lincoln's funny stories were effective means by which attention and sympathy could be easily and quickly secured.

The marvelous development of photography and printing has opened a new door to personal publicity. Persons who habitually attend various kinds of gatherings are constantly being photographed and their pictures reproduced in the Sunday papers. Forty years ago in Quackenbos' old common school grammar, students were required to analyze a sentence which read: "Photography is the art which makes mediocricy look like genius." In our day, photography and printing have not only given a halo of importance to a great many people who were formerly unknown to the public but, by printing these photographs, the Sunday papers have made the faces—even the warts on the noses—of certain individuals known far and wide. Just what—if anything—the reading public gains from looking at these same faces over and over every Sunday is one of the unsolved mysteries of the modern world.

The afflicted public may well console itself with the reflection that every dog has its day. The publicity seekers—like everything else in the world—rise, flourish and pass on to that bourne from which even Lydia E. Pinkham or the long-whiskered inventor of Simmon's Liver Regulator ever returns.

Fifteen years ago newspapers and magazines were filled with the pictures of World War generals, rulers and admirals. Now, most of them are dead and those who are not are rapidly being forgotten. Fifteen years from now the papers will be printing strange new names and faces. Some of these faces will belong to people who have made new discoveries or accomplished something else of value to humanity. Some of the other faces will belong to persons who have discovered the age-old art of butting into the limelight. For no matter what momentous changes may take place—what empires may rise or what stock markets may fall—the hardy ppublicity seeker will still endure so long as human vanity remains.

Thrift Plum Pudding

Two cups cooked carrots, mashed; ¼ cup finely chopped suet, ¼ cup sugar, ¾ tsp. salt, 2 slices of dried bread crumbled, ½ tsp. cinnamon, ¼ tsp. cloves, 2 eggs, beaten; 1 cup raisins and citron, chopped; 2 tsp. baking powder. Mix ingredients in order given and pour into a greased mold. Steam 1½ hours. Serve with whipped cream or hard sauce.

A Hard Sauce that's Different.

Plum Pudding without hard sauce is like turkey without dressing—it just isn't. But there's no reason why you should stick to the same old recipe year after year. Add a new flavor, and your hard sauce becomes something to start table conversation.

Here's a stunt you'll like. Give your hard sauce a spicy, gingery flavor by adding crumbled ginger snaps to your favorite recipe. It's delicious—as in the newly developed Ginger hard sauce recipe you will find below.

One-third cup butter, 1 cup powdered sugar, 1 tsp. vanilla, 1 tbsp. hot water, 14 Ginger snaps, crumbled fine.

Cream butter and sugar. Add vanilla and hot water and beat until light and fluffy. Fold in crumbled ginger snaps.

I got a Christmas card from Mr. Ross, Circuit Court Clerk, Friday, with a verse about not worrying, that the great oaks were once nuts like me. Tuesday morning as I stepped into his office he offered me a cigar and a helping of candy, only one to a customer (but I'm no customer). Trying to make amends, that's all.

A Happy New Year to all and sundry.

"MYSTERY MAN" AGAIN IN JAIL; WAS MARRIED HERE

Had Eloped, Giving Name of G. B. Smith, Two Months Ago

William King Richard, 25, Morgantown's "mystery man" of little more than two months ago, has again had difficulty in keeping his feet on the straight and narrow path and is in jail at Ann Arbor, Michigan, where, authorities say, he took several University of Michigan students on a "ride" on a wildcat financial scheme.

Richard, who, under the name of George B. Smith, eloped to Oakland with a Morgantown girl and married her, later returning to Morgantown with and then leaving her, was found to have been in many scrapes in other parts of the country when officers probed into his past.

But he did not serve any time at Morgantown, principally because a board bill charge was not prosecuted and a lunacy commission examination disclosed that he was insane.

Only a few hours after the mental examination the sheriff disclosed the contents of letters from the youth's mother in Mankata, Minn., in which she said that her son had been in a sanitoria and hospitals since he was a child and that his case "is a pitiful one." She indicated that he is not fully responsible for his acts.

A telegram from J. A. Bursheb, University of Michigan dean, asked for information saying that Richard had represented himself as a former student of West Virginia University who had been dropped because of his drinking habits.

The "mystery man's" girl bride is living in Morgantown with her mother. Her father lives in Philadelphia.

How Times Have Changed—

THE custom of celebrating the advent of the New Year is sunk in antiquity. Let us glance down the centuries toward some of the first stunts in which the populace indulged and see if we aren't inclined to draw a breath of relief as we exclaim, "How times have changed!"

Long, long ago, before the dawn of civilized stomachs, it was a good old pagan custom for the people to celebrate the New Year by gathering in the open where they circled around two wild boars that tore each other to bits. The meat of the dead animals was then divided between the people to feast upon, the best pieces being reserved for those highest in authority. It's a far cry from the midnight supper of today with its carefully chosen hors d'oeuvres to stimulate the flagging appetites of guests whose stomachs revolt at the sight of spilled blood.

In old Scotland a more savory diet was enjoyed on New Year's eve when people thronged through the streets between twelve and one o'clock at night bearing steaming kettles of spiced ale, known in that day as the wassail bowl. As they passed each other on the way to visit neighbors, they stopped to give and take sips, so that their spirits were mounting high when they arrived, to be generously fed on buns and cheese. This pleasant custom persisted for many years until it was abused by the wild youth of the land who took advantage of the occasion for the commission of lawless acts.

At one time the New Year was celebrated by the giving of presents just as Christmas is today. Gloves were a popular contribution to a lady's wardrobe because of their purity. If the gentleman was hesitant in selecting the gloves in person, it was perfectly proper for him to give money for their purchase, which was known as "glove money."

When pins were first invented, about the beginning of the Sixteenth century, they were an even more acceptable gift in feminine circles. They were rough hand-made pins, but were considered rare pieces of workmanship compared with the skewers of bone and wood then in use. If money was given for their purchase, it was known as "pin-money," a phrase which has clung to the language, and connotes money used for any extras, pins or other.

In early American the New Year was celebrated with the simplicity that was part of the times. With no steam cars, motor cars or telephones, people had to depend on stage coaches and ox teams for transportation. It was said that it was of no use to sit up and watch the old year out as the "clocks did so vary that they knew very little of the crossing." So the settlers celebrated by making multitudinous calls the next day, jingling merry sleigh bells and shaking off snow on the door step. Refreshments consisted of great slices of cake, doughnuts, coffee and cider. The custom of making wholesale New Year's calls persisted for many years. Only a short time ago it was still the fashion for families to hold open house.

The Chinese are said to celebrate New Year's in the most unusual fashion of all. They actually feel compelled to pay off their debts before they can be at peace with the world. Of all the customs of various nations, this is perhaps the one most worthy of emulation.—Indianapolis News.

A TOAST

What though the waves of yesteryear
Return upon our beach,
And come again and slip away
Forever out of reach
Let's reignite the torch of days
And hail the new born year—
Old Father Time's young progeny
Is worth a rousing cheer!
—A. C. CLAPP, in Chicago Daily News.

Old New Year's and the New New Year's

MASSACHUSETTS made New Year's a holiday long after the American custom of New Year's calls, which justified its observance, had gone the way of the polka and the hoop skirt. There is nothing American about the carnival-like merry-making which nowadays welcomes the new year. Or can it be that even this is a metamorphosis of the watchnight meeting of 40 years or more ago? To deacons and elders, to all anxious heads of families, it used to seem fitting to spend the last three hours of the year in singing lugubrious hymns and giving thanks that they had been singled out for preservation when so many had been removed by an equally discerning Providence.

But to the young the watchnight meeting was always a dreary service, only to be endured in view of the joys of the morrow. And when the life and color were taken out of the observance of New Year's itself, there seemed little sense in ushering in a day of gloom with a still gloomier New Year's eve. So they left the watchnight meeting to those who found no more pleasure in their days, and for themselves introduced the practice now generally prevalent of indulging in a last fling in preparation for the morrow's disagreeable business of turning over a new leaf. They have revived the old pagan ceremony, except that no miniature skeletons are passed round at the feast to remind them that they are mortal. Nothing in this modern New Year's eve abandon, however, commends it as a substitute for the old and gracious custom of paying and receiving calls, a custom whose desuetude was hastened by the prodigious growth of the large cities in the 25 years following the Civil war.

As people's acquaintances increased numerically their circle widened geographically. Horse-drawn vehicles were still the indispensable ways of getting about. A gentleman who in 1869 could call upon 100 or more ladies and find room in himself for an equal number of cups of coffee or glasses of sherry, was compelled, in 1879, to reduce his calling list by half; he could not get all the way round, even if his brains and his legs held out. As it became apparent that either the custom or its observers must shortly perish from the earth, the custom languished and died. Such of the old observers as survive spend the day sadly. There is nothing they can do to make them repentant. There is no pleasure in making good resolutions which you can't break if you try.—Boston Herald.

Facing Difficulties

The difficulties one sees ahead in the New Year should only encourage one to put his head a little higher in the air and walk more firmly and courageously.—Collier's Weekly.

ODD BELIEFS ABOUT FIRST DAY OF YEAR

TO OPEN a bank account at New Year's was considered lucky in Old England, the custom growing probably from the belief of many centuries that whatever you do on the first day of the year will be an indication of what will happen during the months to follow. So deep seated was this superstition in the minds of men that even after the festival was declared a general holiday, many clung to the old-time belief, and to insure work for the coming year would set the pace by spending at least an hour or two in some useful pursuit.

The first day of the year has been more generally observed than any other holiday, and over a longer period, as well, its observance dating back to the Druids in England and to ancient Babylon when it was made an occasion for a celebration lasting from ten to twelve days. With every nation this holiday has been considered a time for the expression of good will and the renewing of old friendships. The effort to demonstrate the kindly spirit led to the custom of making gifts, often very expensive jewelry and large sums of money. But it was not necessary to remember one's friends in that lavish way for custom made it possible also to express good wishes in a fitting and very humble manner.

Almost every nation has welcomed the New Year with some form of ceremony, not, however, on the same date or in the same way. The Druids celebrated the New Year on the shortest day of the year, the time, in their belief, when the sun, which journeyed away from earth during the cold months, turned homeward bringing with it sunshine, light, warmth and good cheer. The superstitions that cluster around the day began away back in the time of these sun worshipers when the priests led the people to the forests of the gods for small sprigs of mistletoe which would bring them health and prosperity for the year. So important was the event the people marched in processions to the groves, led by the priests, selected for the sacred duty of cutting the mistletoe, being armed with sickles of gold. And just as primitive man made his plans for the beginning of a New Year the Mexican, Japanese, Chinese, Persian, Turk, in fact, every nation on the globe followed in his footsteps, each celebrating according to his own ideas and customs.

Omens of good and bad luck have always been associated with the New Year, all founded more or less upon the belief that supreme power was vested in an unseen deity who could bring good luck if properly appeased or mete out punishments. The Romans named their New Year in honor of Janus, the two-faced god, who had the power to look back over the past, and also in a prophetic way could look into the future. He was represented with a key in his hand symbolizing his power to open doors, and gateways, and this holiday was one of great gayety lasting several days. The festival was not observed in midwinter, but in the spring, when the Roman year began, and had only ten months. Later when two months were added to the calendar, January and February were placed at the beginning of the year, the New Year was celebrated on the first of January.

Among the old superstitions are many quaint customs that have been observed for centuries and have come down almost to this day and age. Among them are the following:

To bring good luck one must wear something new on the first day of the year, according to old English custom.

In some parts of England and Scotland it is supposed to be unlucky to leave a house until some outsider has first entered it.

There is also an old superstition concerning the weather told in an old legend as follows:

"If New Year night wind blowath south,
It betokeneth warmth and growth;
If west, much milk, and fish in the sea;
If north, much cold and storms there'll be;
If east, the trees will bear much fruit,
If northeast, flee it, man and brute."

It was considered unlucky also for one to make a present on New Year's until one had first been received. An old saw pertaining to this custom is as follows:

Take out and take in,
Bad luck is sure to begin,
But take in and take out,
Good luck will come about.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

Word comes from Albany to the effect that the Democrats will lose no time in starting to rebuild an effective party organization. Shortly after the New Year, it is said, Chairman Farley will journey to Washington to make plans and extend the work of the Democratic National Committee. The dispatches continue that both President-elect Roosevelt and Mr. Farley are convinced that with the proper sort of organization the Democratic party can hold much of the sweeping gains it made in the recent election, mostly, of course, in Republican states like Iowa and Michigan.

This once more brings to mind the popular fallacy that it is political machinery which wins political campaigns. Yet the truth is that such machinery plays a minor part in the result, especially in a campaign like the one through which we have just passed. It is necessary of course to have political organization and well supplemented political publicity. But at the same time it must be admitted that Mr. Farley's organization played a minor part in bringing about the election of Mr. Roosevelt in November. The result was due neither to any political wisdom on the part of the Democratic bosses nor to any possible mistakes on the part of the Republican organization during the campaign. The Democratic landslide was due almost solely to economic conditions—in short to the depression. The Democrats would have won without a national chairman, and even if Governor Roosevelt had not stirred outside Albany during the campaign. The Republicans would have lost had they possessed a dozen national organizations with a corresponding number of national chairmen. Anyone who took the trouble to go out into the country during the campaign and to talk to the people, to get their mental reactions, knows that this is true. There was no special enthusiasm for Mr. Roosevelt among the mass of voters. The people were distressed. They knew that they had lost money, that their business or their income was depleted or that they lacked jobs. They were not sure whether a change would do any good or not, but they were willing to try anything in an effort to get things to running better—just as the superstitious gambler will cut the cards or walk around his chair to change the run of luck

If the Democrats under President Roosevelt want to retain the sweeping gains they have made in Republican territory, there is only one way they can do it, and that is to restore prosperity to the American people. If they do this and can convince the people that their policies brought about the return to normalcy, then they have a chance to retain power until such time as factional differences disrupt the party again. But if the promises they made in the last campaign are not fulfilled, if they do not restore prosperity, then a dozen chairmen in Washington and an equal number of efficient Charley Michelsons sending out publicity will not be availing.

A great many political observers are giving credit for the Democratic victory to the organization which Mr. Rascob built up at Washington immediately after the election of 1928 with Jouett Shouse in charge and Mr. Michelson handling the publicity. Credit is due these two gentlemen for their effective work. Perhaps none could have done it better. But if there had been no depression, or if we had pulled out of the slump as it looked like we were going to early in 1931 before the fresh series of European disasters descended upon us, President Hoover would have been hailed as a great and successful leader and would in all likelihood have been reelected in spite of the barbed shafts released against him by his adversaries.

So while it is right and proper for the Democrats to revamp their organization at Washington and start their publicity all over again as they did after the 1928 election, let them not forget that the only way to keep on winning is to do what they promiseed to do in the 1932 campaign. It is a large sized order but it must be accomplished if the party is to retain control. If they do so their machine may run smoothly and their publicity run true But if they don't, the engine will start knocking and the news releases will sound like wails of anguish by the time the next election rolls around.

BITTINGER

May the passing of the old year
And the coming of the new
Bring peace beyond all measure
And joy to all of you.

Christmas Day, mild and bright beyond the usual habit of the season, passed quietly in this little village and it is hoped that the quiet in the homes was companioned by a deep, true spiritual peace in the hearts of all the people, which to anyone is a gift of value far beyond all the glittering treasures contrived by the ingenuity and the iniquity of men, for it is the gift of God prepared for all who will accept it at Christmas time.

The young people of the Glades Mennonite congregation rendered a very interesting and well prepared Christmas entertainment on Christmas Eve.

Miss Ruth Emory spent Christmas week-end as the guest of her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Silas O. Wiley, at their home in Mountain Lake Park.

Messrs. Jacob, Thomas and Frank Brenneman spent last Saturday shopping in Oakland and at the same time visited their brother, Mr. William Brenneman, who is ill at the home of friends in that city.

Mr. and Mrs. Homer Beachy and little daughter Ruth spent the Christmas season with the parents and home folks of Mrs. Beachy in Huntingdon, Pa.

Miss Clare Beachy, a student at Blue Ridge College, spent the Christmas vacation period at the home of her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Beachy, near this village.

Ralph Buckle, teacher of the Sunnyside school, spent the mid-winter vacation here with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver C. Buckle.

An unusually interesting and well prepared program was rendered by the pupils of the village school last Thursday evening at a regular meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association, and Mrs. Baker is to be commended for her efforts and skill in arranging and preparing the entertainment.

Mr. and Mrs. Rex Buckle are doubly glad at this Christmas season, for Santa Claus presented them with a ten-pound son only a few days before Christmas Day.

The Republican has by far the largest circulation list of any Garrett County newspaper.

Lesson for January 1

JOHN PREPARES THE WAY FOR JESUS

Mark 1:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT—Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight. Mark 1:3.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Faithful Messenger.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The King's Messenger.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Heralds of the King.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Preparing the Way for the Christ.

Since the lessons for the first six months of 1933 are mainly taken from the Gospel according to Mark, it is necessary to grasp the central purpose of this Gospel. In the Old Testament is set forth an august portrait of the Messiah. He is the Branch, the King (Jer. 23:5); the Branch, the Servant (Zech. 3:8); the Branch, the Man (Zech. 6:12); the Branch of the Lord (Isa. 4:2).

The fourfold account contained in the Gospels, placed alongside the Old Testament predictions, fits exactly. Matthew presents him as the King; Mark, the Servant of the Lord; Luke as the Kinsman-Redeemer, and John as the Son of God. The central theme of Mark is the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God (1:1). The key verse is Mark 10:45, "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." The key words are "straightway," "forthwith," "immediately." The picture of the divine Servant energetically doing the Father's work is most beautiful, for the girded one is as beautiful as the arrayed one.

I. Who Is This Servant (v. 1)?

This servant who so fully and energetically executed the divine will is the very Son of God.

II. The Forerunner of the Divine Servant (vv. 2-8).

1. Who he was (vv. 2, 3). He was John the Baptist who was prophesied of more than five hundred years before (Isa. 40:3).

2. His mission (v. 2). It was to prepare the way for Christ's coming. He represented himself as but a voice of one crying in the wilderness. He was therefore God's voice proclaiming the divine will and purpose. He was content to be but a voice.

3. His message (vv. 3-8).

a. Prepare ye the way of the Lord (v. 3). It was customary for servants to go before distinguished personages and prepare the way over which they were to travel. In this preparation there was to be a removal of stones, the leveling of the surface, etc. John's message meant therefore that the people should remove from their hearts everything which hindered the incoming of the Lord. He called upon them to humble themselves, to bring down the high places of pride and straighten out the crooked places and confess their sins.

b. The baptism of repentance (v. 4). In preparation for the coming of Christ, people were to repent of their sins. Those who repented were to be baptized. Baptism was to be administered to those who repented as an expression of penitence which led to forgiveness of sin.

c. The coming of the Messiah (vv. 7, 8). The coming one was to be much greater than himself, so great that John was unworthy to loose the latchet of his shoes. The superior dignity of Christ was not only in his person but in the work he was to perform. John merely baptized with water but Jesus with the Holy Ghost.

4. His success (v. 5). People from all over Judea and Jerusalem went out and were baptized. John's dress and demeanor were in keeping with his stern mission. He was clothed with camel's hair and had on a girdle of skin. Locusts and wild honey constituted his food. His food and dress indicated that he had withdrawn from the world as a protest against its follies and sins.

III. The Divine Servant Baptized (vv. 9-11).

Jesus was not baptized because he sinned and therefore needed repentance, but because he had taken the sinner's place and was about to accomplish his work which would constitute the basis of all righteousness. He was now dedicating himself to the task of bringing in righteousness through his sacrificed death. Observe in connection with his baptism:

1. The opened heavens (v. 10). This indicated his connection with heaven.

2. The descent of the Spirit upon him (v. 10). This was the divine seal to his work.

3. The voice of approval from heaven (v. 11). This made clear to John the fact that Jesus was the Messiah.

Be Busy

When you are very busy, your beliefs like your clothes will wear out rapidly, and you will provide yourself with new ones. But keep very busy. . . . Religion is not what men believe. . . . Religion is what men do with their beliefs.

A Divine Man

God will not have his work made manifest by cowards. It needs a divine man to exhibit anything divine.—Emerson.

Brian to the Rescue

By ALICE DUANE

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

IT HAD been an unusually uneventful morning for Brian Kent, sitting at his perfectly appointed desk in one of his uncle's spacious offices.

Brian was getting into shape a report his uncle had asked him to have ready that afternoon.

Once or twice that morning he had been on the verge of interrupting this report business, finding an excuse to dictate a letter so that even for a short few minutes he could have had a reason to have his uncle's very charming young secretary sitting at the opposite side of his desk. But there was always a chance that his uncle might come in unexpectedly—and the report was urgent.

The steady dull drone of machinery was becoming almost unendurable—and then the low, throaty growl followed by the high deafening shriek of the fire alarm.

No special need for alarm, Brian quickly assured himself. After all, the factory people had probably been given specific instructions for orderly exit from the building in such an emergency.

The factory side of the building Brian knew was practically fire proof but this older section that housed the executive offices and the office staffs was of wooden construction. There was a sprinkler system and numerous fire exits, but even then things sometimes happen—

Brian quickly gathered up the papers strewn on his desk, crammed them into his coat pockets and dashed into the large bare room where the typists and stenographers had their desks. Most of the desks were already deserted. Girls were hurrying across the floor to an exit beyond. He called to some who lingered and told them to go without delay.

"Where is Miss Mason?" he called to one of them.

"She ran into the accounting department," the girl told him.

Brian muttered an oath to himself and dashed forward to the accounting department. Miss Mason was kneeling beside a small safe in one of the smaller offices.

In a fraction of a second he reached her, took the papers from her hands, threw them in the safe and without waiting to explain lifted her in his arms.

"What are you doing?" she asked, and then realizing that there was no alternative let her slender young body relax in his strong young arms.

"There is no terrible hurry," she told him, as he hurried down the hall. But Brian assured her that he was taking no chances. He would have carried her down the fire escape if she had not so seriously objected. Instead he went down the stairs ahead of her, turning back at every step to assure himself of her safe descent.

Alice Mason breathed a sigh of relief when she had reached the ground and realized that none of the girls had been looking on.

"They will all be over at the other side," she told Brian, who stood looking down at her in a friendly, possessive way.

"You had me worried for a minute," he said. "And don't you ever take time to put letters in the safe again."

"But that's orders from your uncle," Alice said. "There's always the chance that a letter might be valuable—so just as a matter of drill we always do it."

"Matter of drill!" Brian repeated blankly. "Always do it! What do you mean?"

"Just that every time we have a fire drill we are supposed to do precisely what we would if there was a real fire—"

Brian looked amazed and then laughed.

"The joke's on me," he told her. "But how did I know it was only a drill? No one told me."

"How did you happen to run across me?" Alice asked. "Weren't you going to leave the building?" She was trying not to laugh at him.

"Not until I'd found you," he said. "You see, that's the first thing I thought of when I heard that shrieking siren. I suppose I thought I was saving your life or something—anyway, I'm glad for your sake the other girls didn't see the rescue—" He looked a little crestfallen and foolish.

"I wouldn't have minded, if you hadn't," Alice told him. "I started to cry out at first, because I was so surprised. But—I didn't mind. I'd been hoping all morning you'd send for me to take some dictation—"

"And I'd been wishing I had a chance—"

A gong rang. Alice said it was the signal to return to the building. She wasn't laughing now. "I'm very grateful to you."

"Oh, pshaw," Brian told her, "I really made a mistake—and incidentally let you know, as you must know now, that I'm seriously interested."

"Couldn't we talk about that some other time?" Alice suggested. "That is—I've got to get back in line to go in with the other girls—" she was walking away from him now—"but I'm interested, too."

"Let's talk about it tonight at dinner," he called softly. "I'll call you in for dictation and we can make plans— So long, Alice—"

"So long, Brian. Thanks for the rescue. And next time there's to be a drill I'll let you know."

Roger's Press Agent

By MARK HEALEY

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

ROGER TRUE always had dreaded parties, but that night of the Shaw's dinner party everything seemed different. The charming Mrs. Shaw greeted him with a beaming smile and Mr. Shaw, whom he had met only once before, had greeted him like an old friend. After that Shaw and he had gone arm in arm into the drawing room while Mrs. Shaw had presented him to the other guests.

"I do want you to meet Mr. True," she would say to one of the older women, "Roger True, you know. It's a great treat to have him with us." Or to another guest, "Molly, dear, this is our friend Roger True. You and he must have a chat together." And then Mr. Shaw again taking his arm led him into the study to two of the older men. "This is Roger True," he told them. "He's doing great things at the Durand plant—put over that new dehydrated process." And then Roger True forgot all about his sandy red hair, his spectacles and his large awkward hands, and felt as much at ease as he would have felt at the Durand plant.

Naturally Mrs. Shaw didn't present him to Stella Howe because it was Stella who had introduced him to the Shaws just ten days ago at the country club. Stella, talking to one of the younger men when Roger came in, had merely smiled and said "Hello, Roger," as Mr. Shaw led him to the library.

That half-hearted sort of greeting from Stella had been a little disconcerting and as Roger talked easily with the men in the library he had it in mind that later he must have a talk with Stella. He had expected to sit beside her at dinner but fifteen minutes later he found himself seated as guest of honor at Mrs. Shaw's right, with a charming, golden-haired blond on the other side.

In the back of his mind Roger tried to figure out what had happened. Either Mrs. Shaw was one of those perfect hostesses whose object is to make shy and awkward guests feel at home, or else her guests were much more responsive than any he had met at parties at home.

Mr. Shaw insisted on driving Roger back to his hotel, an arrangement that made it impossible for him to go home with Stella, and Roger felt not only a sense of disappointment but something of self-reproach as well because he had had no time to talk to her.

"I'm sorry I didn't have a chance to talk to you," he told her when they chanced to meet in the hall. "Maybe I can see you tomorrow evening."

"Maybe," said Stella rather vaguely.

Roger sat thinking things over in his hotel room after the party trying to account for his amazing success as compared with the sense of complete failure that he usually experienced. The odd thing had been that of all the guests he had met, Stella and the Shaws were the only ones he had known before, and the Shaws he had met but once before. "They treated me as if I were somebody important. That's why I didn't feel shy."

The next day Roger was too absorbed with conferences and consultations at the plant to worry much about the situation, but that night when he went to call on Stella his embarrassment amounted almost to humiliation. And as he met her in the stately old-fashioned drawing room of her father's house he felt all the old-time awkwardness and self consciousness returning.

"I'm afraid I made a fool of myself last night," Roger told her. "I'm sorry for your sake."

"Fool of yourself?" said Stella. "You were gorgeous. Mrs. Shaw has telephoned me twice to tell you how wonderful you are and two of the other people have called up to find out how much longer you'll be here in the East. They're planning to have more parties. Mr. Mason told Mrs. Mason you were the most brilliant young man he'd ever met. They want you for dinner Saturday."

"But how did they—" Roger began, and then stopped, as his eyes met Stella's. "What made them think I was somebody? I felt like the worst cheat in the world. As a matter of fact, I've nothing to offer—"

"Don't you ever say that again, Roger True," Stella said. "You know what you've done for Durands'. I know, because you've told me and because my brother told me when he wrote that you were coming on."

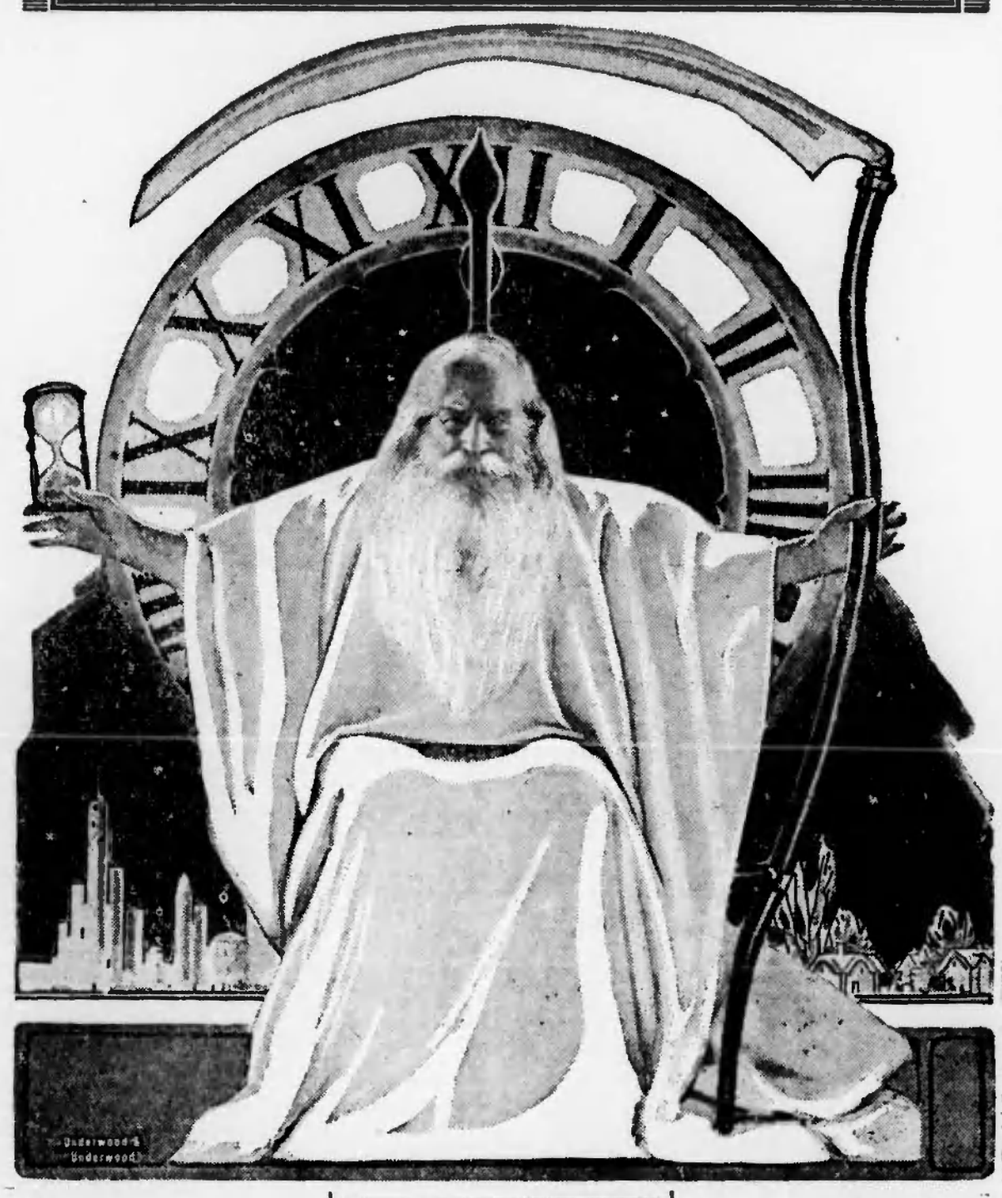
"If I have done a little something—how do they know?"

"Because I told them. I told the Shaws that you were one of the cleverest men I knew. I told them you were a comer, I told them that some day you'd be famous. I told them because I knew that if they didn't know it to start with they'd ignore you and that when people ignore you, you act like a goop. I knew that what you need is a press agent—"

"But, Stella, you had no right—" Roger realized he had made a false start. All that seemed to matter then was that Stella thought he was somebody. Ever since he had met her he had been fighting against his feelings of inadequacy, fighting against the charm that she exerted over him—and here she was telling him that he was somebody, telling him he was the cleverest man she knew.

Roger left his chair and took her in his arms. "I can't figure it out, Stella," he told her. "I know I need you. But more than that I love you!"

A Toast to the New Year



BOB JUDSON went down to breakfast New Year's morning with his shirt cuffs dangling. He had watched the old year out and the new year in at his young sister's party and had promised to go skating with the "crowd" by nine in the morning.

"What in thunder do you mean by swiping my cuff buttons, Peggy?" he said to his sister.

"Only this," cooed Peggy, who was eighteen and uncommonly pretty. She held up her hands, showing the cuffs of a blouse of masculine cut. "I needed them, dearie, so before you were awake I came in and got them. Don't be huffy, sweetheart, it's New Year's day."

"Well, you needn't be so absurdly good-natured," growled Bob.

"No, denrest!" said Peggy. "But it's New Year's day and I've made some resolutions. One's to be very good-natured. And I'm beginning on you. I have made out some for you, too," she added.

Tom read in small, rather childish writing, these resolutions thought by his little sister to cover his besetting sins:

Tom and Madge at No. 26 Bedford Street.

Not to flirt.

Not to be scrappy.

Note to be late for dinner—"It annoys cook so."

Not to be hoggish—This had special reference to neckties, fountain pens, cuff buttons, etc.

Not to get engaged before the next New Year's day. "Because unattached men are scarce and we need you in the bunch to piece out with."

"Bobby, dear," resumed Peggy, "I've asked some of the girls to come in this evening to practice a new dance step. We're a man short. That is we are a girl extra. Sally's bringing her cousin," she continued.

Bob's social engagements in his own and his sister's set kept him until darkness had begun to settle. But, as he reflected, it was only half past five, and with half an hour to get home and dinner at half past six, he would be in good time. He could boast to Peggy that he had kept all his resolutions at least for the day.

He was aware of the fact that there was a young woman walking hurriedly beside a man on the opposite side of the street. Then he saw the young woman quickly cross the street. She waved her hand and fairly pounced upon him with a "Why, Marmaduke, dear, how glad I am to see you!"

Tom remembered the first resolution given by Peggy. "Not to flirt."

"I thought it was you, Marmaduke," said the girl, walking beside him and laughing gayly. "Of course, you were on your way to our house. We half expected you, but I didn't know you would come this way." It seemed to Tom that the girl was talking very loudly. And then in an aside she said, "Marmaduke Butler's your name."

Then Tom realized that the man who had been talking to the girl had caught up with them.

"Say, who are you?" said the young man, well dressed, but with his hat drawn over his eyes.

"Why, I'm Marmaduke Butler," stammered Tom.

"I don't believe it," snarled the stranger. "We don't neither of us know her. And I came along first."

Tom did not wait to know what was coming next. He shook off the girl's hold, his fists clenched and his muscles tightened without volition. The next minute he had struck out toward the annoying stranger, and with the third blow the stranger was prone on the path.

"Take me home," whispered the girl, honrsely. "It's 26 Bedford street. Can you find it?" They hurried on. The man was soon following them again as they proceeded.

Tom stood with her on the porch of the house marked 26 until a servant came to the door. "May I see you again?"

"Oh, no," said the girl. "It would seem as if I had been very impertinent if we ever met again. But I shall always be grateful." Then the door closed and Tom in much confusion traced his steps homeward. It was a quarter to seven when he reached home.

"Tom, you have broken one of your resolutions the first thing," chirped Peggy.

"I've broken more than one," said Tom dismally. "I've flirted with a girl, knocked a man over, I've felt as if I wanted something all to myself, and if I get half a chance I'll be engaged before next year. Say, Peggy, Sally lives somewhere in Bedford street, doesn't she?"

"Twenty-six," said Peggy. "And I shouldn't wonder if you'd better remember that, because you'll have to see Sally's cousin home. You see, she's the extra girl tonight."

Then the telephone bell rang and Peggy was absorbed for many minutes. She burst in upon Tom in the dining room, where he was finishing dinner alone. 'Tom, hurry. I am afraid you'll have to get Sally and her cousin. Burton James was going to meet them here and they were coming alone, but the cousin—Madge is her name—had the most awful experience, perfectly awful. A man followed her. They walked along and then he took her arm, wanted to make a date with her and everything. Madge didn't know what to do, it was so dark and lonely. But she says the nicest man came along and saw her difficulty and knocked the man down and took her home, then left without letting her know who he was. Wasn't that splendid? Now the girls are afraid to come alone for fear that other man will meet them."

Of course, Tom hastened to 26 Bedford street, and of course the affair ripened into a romance, and long before the year was out announcements were made of the engagement of Madge and Tom.

RING OUT, WILD BELLS

RING out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light;
The year is dying in the night;
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring, happy bells, across the snow;
The year is going, let him go;
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the grief that saps the mind
For those that here we see no more;
Ring out the feud of rich and poor,
Ring in redress to all mankind.

Ring out a slowly dying cause,
And ancient forms of party strife;
Ring in nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws.

Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease,
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

—LORD TENNYSON.

MT. LAKE PARK

Our Community Tree

Old Man Gloom must have thought that his influence was somewhat weakened at the Park and Loch Lynn during Christmas week. Most of the householders seemed to take a keen delight in socking him in the solar plexus.

On Christmas Eve the Mayor and Council formally presented our first community tree to the people of the Park. Many automobiles and scores of people gathered around a beautiful living pine tree, some thirty feet in height, located on the front lawn of Braethorn cottage. The tree, with many varicolored lights shining with star-like radience through its dark green foliage, was a thing of beauty.

The processional, with a hundred or more children, wearing surplices, with lighted candles, singing "O, come all ye faithful," sung by countless thousands for hundreds of years, was especially effective. The singing of "The star spangled banner" was followed by prayer by Rev. I. S. Middaugh.

Miss Sara B. Huff, so well and favorably known as the musical director of last summer's Tableland and Bicentennial programs, led a special choir in singing the age old Christmas carols, illustrated by views thrown on a large canvas. Then came a reading by Miss Eleanor Moser entitled "The birthday of the King".

Symbolically, the Christmas tree springs from the Cradle. This thought was carried out by a representation of the Manger at the base of the tree, which was illuminated by a spotlight during the reading by Miss Moser.

Presently, off in the distance, the jingle of sleigh bells was heard, followed in a few minutes by old Santa himself, in full regalia, who explained to the children that owing to the lack of snow and somewhat depleted finances, his sleigh had to be abandoned.

But his forced change in transportation did not lessen his generosity, for his wagon was loaded with gifts and presents for all. Literally hundreds of pounds of food was distributed by him through the generosity of the local Camp of the Woodmen of the World. Then there was candy, fruit and nuts for every child present.

The spirit behind the inauguration of this community tree promises to blosom into an annual event, with an effort to merge all the Christmas Eve exercises in this immediate section into one large Community service, to be held possibly in the auditorium.

Many cottages in the Park this year are beautifully illuminated. Among those we have noticed (doubtless there are many others) we may mention the cottages of C. V. Harvey, the Bud Winters' cottage and those of Mrs. Nine and H. V. Leighton. Special mention must be made of the cottage and grounds of Mrs. Winchell. Her decorations and illuminating effect were truly a work of art and looked as if it were taken from a fairy book illustration.

No doubt those who are here just for the summer months picture the Park buried and shut in under a deep mantle of snow, with the thermometer giving the zero point a run for its money. They should have been here this Christmas, when the weather smacked of the sunny south—the temperature registering around 65, with a beautiful clear sky overhead, flecked occasionally by summer-like, scuttling clouds. And then in the evening the sun set in a most gorgeous array of colors.

Family parties were the order of the day. Turkey, that bird which the Pilgrim fathers made more popular than the built-up fame of Greta Garbo, graced many tables, owing to its cheapness.

Among other reasons, we believe the number of relatives gathered around the festive board, entitled the Christmas dinner served at the home of Mr. A. A. Callis to special mention. Thirty-three persons sat down to a bountiful repast, the piece de resistance being a 20-pound turkey. Those present were Lincoln Callis, Miss Grace Callis, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Callis, Miss Inez Callis, Joseph Callis, Jr., Edmund and Carleton Callis, Mr. and Mrs. E. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Callis, Carl and Leo Callis, Emma, Catherine and Juanita Callis, Mr. and Mrs. Larna and son James, Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Sisk, Miss Mary Sisk, Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Kitzmiller, Joseph O'Brien, Cecil Sisk, Isaac and Michael Lambert. Entertainment consisted of vocal music, 2 violins, piano, month-harps, accordion and Jew's-harps.

The entertainments and Christmas treats furnished by the United Brethren and Baptist Sunday schools, as well as the celebration by the Loch Lynn public school, were decided successes and drew capacity houses.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

The Septuagint is such an important link in the chain of divine revelation that we feel justified in devoting another article to a discussion of its most important editions.

In 1587 Pope Sixtus 5th authorized what is known as the Roman edition. It was the joint work of several learned men, who were engaged upon nine years. The Vatican Codex was the text upon which this edition was based, the chasms in which were filled up from two other manuscripts of less ancient date. The Vatican text is not, indeed, always followed, but its orthography is changed into the usual Greek forms, and the editors have sought to improve what they regarded as fautly in the manuscript without always indicating their deviation from it.

Upon this edition, five others of great importance have been based: 1. The London Polyglot, 1657, with various readings from the Alexandrian Codex and from other manuscripts; 2. The edition of Lambert Bos Franeker, 1709, with introduction concerning the history and criticism of the Septuagint; 3. The edition of John Reineccius, Leipzig, 1730, second edition, 1757. The Roman text is accompanied by the most important variations of the Alexandrian and other manuscripts; 4. The edition of Leander Van Ess, Leipzig, 1824, a copy of the Roman text; 5. That of Constantine Tichendorf, two volumes, Leipzig, 1850, fourth edition, 1869. This includes the Vatican text, also various readings of the Alexandrian Codex, as well as those of Ephraem, and of Frederico-Augustanus. This favorite edition contains rich prolegomena, and at the end, the Book of Daniel, according to the Septuagint.

There are many other editions and criticisms of this monumental work, a catalog of which would be tedious and unprofitable to the average reader. Our object has been to show how earnest and devoted the scholars of the world have been in their effort to reconstruct from the famentary records of the ancient past the essential facts of divine revelation. Doubtless, much that we yearn to know has been lost. John, the beloved disciple, declares at the conclusion of his version of the life of Jesus of Nazareth: "And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they were written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written.'

Let us therefore be assured that we have received enough truth in the Bible to transform the world, if only that truth could be incarnated in each successive generation of believers.

Israel Putnam Was Real Adventurer

Nearly everyone in America knows something about the exploits of General Israel Putnam in the war of the Revolution, but it is not so widely known that this famed statesman had an adventurous career outside the struggle for American freedom, that in fact he was an Indian fighter and explorer as well as an officer in Washington's army. There is an interesting account of this patriot's adventures in the current issue of the National Republic. It was written by Rev. J. H. F. Boese, under the title "The Story of Israel Putnam." In part, Rev. Boese says:

"Each particular epoch has produced its characters peculiar to that epoch, men who have fitted in splendidly in that particular time. Their outstanding attainments, their noble character and their powerful influence for good have stamped their illustrious careers in indelible words upon the pages of history. Such a person was General Israel Putnam. He was a man of intrepidity and of exceptional courage. Of somewhat emotional temperament and possessing an intense fervor, kindled by that patriotic fire which burned incessantly within his breast, he was ready to take immediate hold of any task, no matter how difficult, throwing his whole being into the undertaking.

"Israel Putnam descended from a noble English family. His great-grandfather, John Putnam, with his good wife, Priscilla, migrated from England to this country in 1634, bringing with them their three sons, Nathaniel, Thomas and John. The latter was the grandfather of the subject of this sketch. Israel's father, Joseph, having within his veins coursing the blood of the daring pioneers of the previous century, it stands to reason that Israel should have inherited many of the splendid traits of his noble ancestors.

"It was a very unpretentious spot, that little town of Salem, in Massachusetts, where the hero of our narrative was born January 7th, 1718. With its quaint flat-roofed houses on a very monotonous level ground and its irregular streets, it was not a very attractive place.

"Its history has not been very complimentary and salutary due to the days of the outrages resulting from the witchcraft delusion which was written in characters of blood upon its pages. Israel Putnam's father was open in his disapproval of these persecutions. He incurred not only the ill-will of his neighbors and certain of his own relatives but also his life was endangered by his opposition to the devlish practice. Therefore he always kept his musket ready and his best horse saddled to be able to flee immediately, should he be accused of the crime.

"The name of Israel Putnam appears in the annals of the French and Indian War and in the Revolutionary War where he is depicted as being a person of great daring and remarkable bravery.

"Already in his boyhood days he exhibited that spirit of fearlessness which made him famous in years to come. General Humphreys tells an anecdote of this remarkable lad. Young Putnam had gone to Boston and while there was chaffed on account of his rustic appearance, by a much bigger boy who seemed bent on picking a quarrel. Israel stood it for a while but at length turned to his insulter and gave him a good sound flogging to the delight of the lookers-on.

"Israel Putnam exhibited during his youth uncommon physical vigor and energy. Not being cut out for the classroom, he found his sphere of activity in God's out-of-doors on the farm and later in the daring military exploits on many a bloody battlefield. His abhorrence of schooling was not due to a lazy willful attitude, but on account of his intense love for nature and the lure of field, forest and stream. This to him was an education and one which came in good stead in his later career."

Of Paleontological Interest

The La Brea pits are in the city of Los Angeles, Calif. Numbers of very interesting paleontological specimens of fossil animals have been recovered from them. La Brea is the Spanish word for tar and these pits are so called because of a deep tar formation which held the bones of these prehistoric animals in a fine state of preservation. The pits are located in a public park on Wilshire boulevard, which is the main arterial highway leading from the heart of Los Angeles due west to the ocean.

Great Egyptian Queen Has Unique Monument

A woman who once ruled a mighty empire, exercising sway over the destinies of ancient Egypt, has now been revealed as the owner of the Fourth pyramid at Gizn. This woman ruler must have been an extraordinarily powerful queen, for she bears the titles of King of Upper and Lower Egypt," "Mother of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt," "Daughter of the God, i. e., the King." This is the first known instance of a queen's pyramid standing separately from that of her royal husband—it is built upon a solitary rock, shaped to form its core—and no other queen of the old kingdom has been found with the title "King of Upper and Lower Egypt." The enstern and northern sides of the pyramid are cut in regular steps, and the tomb measures at its base about 150 feet oa each side. In the southeast face a large chamber was cut in the rock, and the entrance to it has jambs of single blocks of granite nearly 10 feet high.

635 Influenza Cases in Maryland Counties

Dr. Robert H. Riley, director of the State Department of Health, yesterday said he had received reports of 227 new cases of influenza during the day from the counties of Maryland, exclusive of the City of Baltimore.

These brought the counties' total to 635 cases, he said, as compared with only 19 cases for the entire month of November. He asserted the disease appears to be of a mild form and no fatalities have been reported to date.

Dr. Riley warned that neglect even of the mildest cases is liable to result seriously, however, and the threat of pneumonia is ever-present.

NEW WATER ORDINANCE IS PASSED BY CITY COUNCIL

Permission Granted To Oakland Boy Scouts To Plant Trees

A new water ordinance for the town of Oakland was read the second time and passed at the regular monthly meeting of the Mayor and Council on Monday evening. The new ordinance changes the time for the reading of meters and collections for water rents from the monthly basis to a quarterly basis and makes the collector directly responsible for the collection of all water accounts.

Under the old ordinance after the discount period had expired the delinquent list was turned over to an attorney for collection, thus relieving the collector of all responsibility. Under the new ordinance, however, the collector is required to make settlement in full with the council for all water bills. The ordinance also provides that he shall have power to turn the water off at the homes or business places of all delinquents and enter suit for collections of the money due.

Permission was granted the Oakland Boy Scouts to plant historic nut trees on the water farm property and also along the property line on the city's Third street lot.

Clarence Murphy was granted a permit to erect two gasoline pumps on Liberty street.

A permit was granted Francis E. Gonder to erect a one-story frame building 12 feet wide by from 40 to 60 feet long on the Gonder property on Second street, the building to be erected on a narrow strip of ground between the residence and the Lutheran church.

An order was passed applying the sum of $1,000 toward the payment of the street improvement loan, reducing the debt to $1,500.

The walnuts to be planted by the Boy Scouts, are some of the historic nuts received by the Oakland Civic Club for distribution in the county. Providing the weather is favorable, planting will take place on Saturday.

LEGION RELIEF DRIVE TO BE CONDUCTED FOR NEEDY

Cards and Boxes To Be Placed in Stores—Scouts To Help

Proctor Kildow Post, No. 71, American Legion, and the Boy Scouts of Oakland, have joined to conduct a campaign for the collection of clothing, food, and all other material those who are more fortunate have and are in a position to give for the needy, Joseph M. Gonder, post commander, has announced.

"While the organizations mentioned will lend every effort necessary in conducting this campaign," Mr. Gonder said, "they are aware that the success of the undertaking depends upon the generosity of the people.

There will be placed in ten business houses red boxes with cards, and those who can help are requested to write their names and addresses upon these cards and drop them in the box.

These cards will be collected and a car or truck will call at each place on Saturday of each week to collect whatever the party desires to give.

The goods collected will be assembled at a central location and a complete record of all goods received and distributed will be kept. For the time being it is the desire of the committee to secure clothing for children and adults, and so everyone is urged to look into that old trunk or clothes press and dig up some of those things that have been replaced with new, but considered too good to cast away.

"They are needed by some one less fortunate than you," Mr. Gonder said, "and you may rest assured they will be given to those deserving of them. Remember in 1917 you did your bit for U. S. In 1933 do your bit for the needy."

Edward C. Lawrence is chairman of the committee and Henry Selders, Dr. George E. Clarke, Clarence Spear and Mr. Gonder are the other members of the committee having the affair in charge.

Chronology of World Events To Be Found on Another Page

A chronology for the year 1932, covering events and happenings other than those of the immediate community, appears on another page of this issue of The Republican.

The chronology was compiled by E. W. Pickard for The Republican and refers to events of foreign, international and domestic interest, happenings in the sports and aviation world, disasters, concluding with necrology.

CONTEST OVER STATE'S ROAD LAWS IS LOOMING

Proposed Legislative Change of Existing Statutes Regarding Supervision and Maintenance

TWO PLANS ARE OFFERED

The question of a change in the existing state laws regarding the supervision and maintenance of county roads and the funds for that use appears to be one which the members of the Maryland Legislature probably must consider the coming session.

Although agitation for some change of that sort has sprung up recently from sources familiar with the county roads situation, the many varying suggestions as to just how to modify the existing statutes give evidence that a stiff contest is likely to be provoked.

Two Plans Proposed

The association of county commissioners was among the first to formulate a plan designed to bring about such a change, their suggestion having as its eventual purpose a reduction in the road tax rates in the counties.

That association has agreed to press a plan under which one cent of the two-cent gas tax maintenance fund would be allocated to the counties for expenditure by the counties on county roads.

The only other plan which resembles this is that proposed by the Maryland Farm Bureau Federation which advocates that:

The present tax of two cents on gasoline which is used for maintenance of the state highway system be reduced to one cent and the other cent be devoted to maintenance of county roads whose maintenance is now financed by the counties; also to reduce the present one and one-half cent lateral road tax, which now goes for the maintenance of lateral roads paid for by the state, by one-half cent. This one-half cent, together with the other half-cent could be used to pay for the county roads now paid for by the counties.

Lee Opposes Plan

During one of the meetings of the county commissioners' organization E. Brooke Lee, member of the State Roads Commission, denounced the plan adopted by the association, but

Civic Club Conducting Good Will Industry For Needy

All those who have old clothing or excess food, or anything that might benefit the needy, are being asked to bring them to the Anderson building, Alder street, on Tuesday and Friday afternoons, where the Oakland Civic club is conducting a good-will industry.

Material is gone over, mended and put in shape, and then these pieces are exchanged to those who need them for a certain amount of work or money. Sewing helpers are needed, according to a member of the Civic club, and anyone desiring to assist in this work will be welcome.

JOY GRIFFITH IS BADLY HURT BY DYNAMITE BLAST

Former Deputy Sheriff Loses Eye and Suffers Broken Arm In Explosion Friday

WAS BLOWING OUT STUMPS

Joy Griffith, 40 years old, former deputy sheriff of Garrett county, was badly injured at three o'clock last Friday afternoon when a stick of dynamite exploded while he was engaged in blasting a stump from a field on the Beekman farm, about two miles south of Oakland.

Griffith, his father-in-law, William Beckman, and his brother-in-law, Russell Beckman, were all engaged in blowing the stumps. One charge of the explosive failed to go off and the men returned to the stump and placed a second charge beneath it. When this second charge exploded they returned to the spot to inspect the effect of the blast when a shot exploded, whether it was the first or last one placed being unknown. Griffith received the full force of the explosion.

His right side was shattered by the force of the blast and his face was mutiliated. His right arm was broken in two places and it is almost certain that he will lose the sight of one eye, if not both of them.

He was immediately taken to Memorial Hospital, Cumberland, where he is reported to be getting along fairly well, although the extent of his injuries are not yet apparent. He is under the charge of Dr. W. A. Gracie.

Griffith is well known in the county through his activities as a deputy sheriff under William D. Casteel in recent years. He is married and has two children, his family and himself making their home at the residence of Mrs. Griffith's father, Mr. William Beckman. Until recently Mrs. Griffith was a patient at the State Sanitorium at Sabillasville.

New Year Greeted Calmly By Oaklanders

With the passing of the old and the arrival of the new, coming on the wings of a light snow storm, following rapidly falling temperatures Saturday night, young Mr. 1933 was welcomed calmly by Oaklanders, with very little display of noise and merriment.

A bell tolled and here and there firearms were discharged into the air, but other than this tame demonstration the New Year arrived just as any other ordinary day might come.

About thirty couples attended a dance at the William-James Hotel, while watchnight parties were held by small groups in various parts of the town. Many listened to the noisy demonstration in Times Square, New York, which came over the radio as 1933 arrived.

Earlier in the evening several people in Oakland heard the demonstration in Berlin, Germany, over the radio, which was followed by a service in a Paris (France) church.

1155 MARRIAGE LICENSES WERE ISSUED LAST YEAR BY CLERK OF THE COURT; NUMBER IS LESS THAN IN 1931

Couples From West Virginia Secure 697 Of The Total—July Was The Heaviest Month

CAME FROM 16 STATES

A total of 1155 marriage licenses, an average of more than three every day, or 96 a month, was issued from the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court in Oakland during 1932 to couples from West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Maryland, and twelve other scattered States and the District of Columbia. The total was less than for any year since 1926.

During January, February and July of the year just closed, the monthly records were higher than those made in 1931, but February was the only month in which a record was made when 98 were issued. The largest month of the year was July when 129 licenses were issued.

697 Couples From West Virginia

Six hundred ninety-seven of the 1155 couples were from the State of West Virginia; 199 from Pennsylvania; 118 from Maryland; 25 from Ohio, and the remainder from New York, Iowa, Illinois, Virginia, Kentucky, Alabama, Delaware, Michigan, Nevada, Georgia, Indiana, South Carolina and the District of Columbia.

In the remaining number of licenses issued the contracting parties were from different states, Maryland-West Virginia couples having the greatest number with 43; Pennsylvania-West Virginia and Ohio-West Virginia couples coming next with 21 each.

Fifty-one couples were refused licenses during 1932, and 320 of those securing them requested that they be not published.

GEORGE W. HARVEY HEADS BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS

Is Elected President At Organization Meeting Monday

The Board of County Commissioners of Garrett county met and organized on Monday when Mr. George W. Harvey was named president of the body. He succeeds Mr. George D. Browning, who, with the exception of one year, has been president of the Commissioners' Board for more than twelve years. Mr. Browning accepted the presidency last year with the request that he be relieved at the beginning of 1933.

The other member of the Board is James A. Fitzwater. Routine matters were taken up by the organization at the regular meeting, and it was not until late Tuesday night that the body adjourned.

BOYS' BAND GIVES 6TH ANNUAL CONCERT SUNDAY

Difficult Music Rendered Before Packed House in Local Theatre With R. H. Brown Directing

MAYOR GIVES SHORT TALK

Before a packed house at the Maryland Theatre, the Gilbert-Brown Boys' Band of Oakland presented its sixth annual concert on Sunday evening at 8:45 o'clock. The numbers played consisted of selections from famous composers, including solo numbers and specialties by individual members of the organization.

This was the second concert under the direction of Russell Brown, who assumed charge of the organization as director when R. R. Gilbert removed with his family from Oakland to Buckhannon, W. Va., more than a year ago.

Mayor Grover C. Stemple, who made a few remarks during the concert, pointed out the achievements of the band during the past year, the number of broadcasts, the winning of first prize at the State Firemen's convention at Frostburg, and the honors conferred upon them during the Tableland Fair at Pittsburgh.

He declared this to be by far the best concert ever presented here and complimented the members for playing such high class music.

Mr. Gilbert, former director, was present, and directed one of the selections, while Julius B. Littman, assistant director, also had charge of one number as director.

The program consisted of four marches, a waltz, overture to the opera "Martha," "Suite de Ballet" in four parts, and three solo selections with Elvin Iman, Donald Stemple and Howard Rathbun solists. All solo numbers were given encores.

The concert was entirely free to the public and at the conclusion of the concert a silver offering was taken at the door, which netted approximately $30. The use of the theatre was donated through the courtesy of Bernard I. Gonder, manager.

The band was organized in March 1927, and gave its first concert in December of the same year.

$110 Raised Thus Far in T. B. Seal Sale Campaign

Tuberculosis Seal Sale receipts turned in during this year's drive in Garrett county amount to $110, according to Mrs. C. Milton Sincell, the county chairman.

No return has been made on a large number of seals mailed to citizens throughout the county, Mrs. Sincell stated, and she urges that either the seals or the money for the seals be mailed to her as soon as possible so that a complete check-up might be made. The total turned in thus far is below that of last year.

ASSEMBLY ORGANIZES WITH MANY PLANS OF ECONOMY

Told By Governor That Budget Must Be Balanced Without Additional Taxes

HARRINGTON IS SPEAKER

Maryland's 1933 General Assembly was launched on a keynote of general economy yesterday as Governor Albert C. Ritchie told members of the House and the Senate, convened in a joint session, that the state budget must be balanced within estimated revenues for the next biennium and that new sources of revenue should be looked for only as a means of lightening the tax burden.

In a House chamber packed with assembly members, their friends and distinguished visitors from every part of the State, Governor Ritchie read an abstract of his message late in the afternoon, after both chambers had completed their organization with the reelection of Senator Walter J. Mitchell, Charles county Democrat, as president of the Senate, and the confirmation of Delegate T. Barton Harrington, of Baltimore City, as speaker of the House. The ceremonies over, both houses adjourned until 8 o'clock Tuesday night.

Opening Mostly Routine

The formal opening of the assembly was, for the most part, routine, with both chambers assembling in the early afternoon for the election of their officers. Because of overwhelming democratic majorities, the formal indorsement of the party caucus selections for the Senate presidency and the House speakership was only a matter of form.

Senator L. Creston Beauchamp (Rep., Somerset), and Delegate Oliver H. Metzerott (Rep., Prince George's), brought forward futilely by the Republicans, automatically became the minority floor leaders of the respective houses.

Except for the selection of Harrington, who replaced Francis A. Michel, Baltimore City veteran, as speaker, the preliminary organization of the assembly showed little change over the 1931 term. Emerson L. Crothers, Cecil countian, was again chosen Senate secretary, and "Uncle" Albert Almony, veteran of many a legislative gathering, once more will officiate as clerk of the House of Delegates. Only minor changes were made in the desk personnel of both houses, although Delegate Metzerott made an effort to substitute an entire new slate for the list brought forth by the House majority.

Sleeman Administers Oath

Of the two separate gatherings which preceded the joint session addressed by the governor, the House meeting was far the more ceremonious. After the ballot which showed him elected Speaker, Harrington was administered the oath of office by Delegate Jonathan Sleeman (Rep., Allegany), a lay minister.

While the Senate membership was intact the same twenty-nine members who served through 1931 being on the roster, three new faces appeared in the House of Delegates.

Immediately on assuming office, Speaker Harrington administered the oath to Delegates Robert R. Kimble (Rep., Allegany), Owen S. Jones (Rep., Calvert) and Junius A. Love (Dem., Washington), elected last November to fill vacancies caused by death. One vacancy—the seat formerly occupied by the late Albert A. Markley (Rep., Garrett)—still exists.

Mr. Markley died on Friday before the election in November and it was agreed by local leaders of both parties in the county that no candidates should be named.

Governor's Proposals

Besides discussing the important activities and projects of the State government the Governor's message also took up proposals for tax reductions, aid and relief for the Baltimore City and the counties' financial problems and means of lowering the salaries of state officials and employes.

Governor Ritchie said the "State tax rate is reduced from 25 to 22 cents" on $100. He added further reductions might be made possible by the levy of a luxury tax.

On the subject of finances, the governor proposed for the consideration of the general assembly the following recommendations:

Lesson for January 8

JESUS BEGINS HIS WORK

Mark 1:12-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel. Mark 1:15.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus' First Helpers.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Winning a Victory.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making a Good Beginning.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Jesus Facing His Task.

I. The Divine Servant Meeting and Overcoming the Devil (vv. 12, 13).

The temptation in the wilderness was Messianic. It was not a preparation of Jesus for his work but the first conflict. Since he had come to destroy the devil (Heb. 2:14), he at once engaged in that struggle which was to issue in Satan's defeat.

1. The Spirit driveth him (v. 12). This shows how really Christ was under the control of the Spirit. "Driveth" is the same Greek word which is used in connection with Christ casting out devils (See Mark 1:34, 39).

2. He was in the wilderness forty days, tempted of Satan (v. 13). Not that he fasted forty days and was then tempted, but that the struggle with the devil lasted forty days.

3. He was with the wild beasts (v. 13). The clear implication is that he not only overcame the devil but had dominion over the wild beasts also.

4. The angels ministered unto him (v. 13). These superhuman messengers doubtless ministered to him all through the forty days.

II. The Divine Servant Preaching (vv. 14, 15).

Jesus does not first present himself as a miracle worker, but as a preacher, a bearer of a message. Miracles were but the credentials of the messenger.

1. Where he preached—in Galilee (v. 14). Galilee was particularly his own country. His ministry there was some distance removed from Jerusalem, and there less opposition would likely be manifest.

2. What he preached—the gospel of the Kingdom of God (v. 14). Since "gospel" means "good news," the essential content of his message was that God had sent him to announce the good news of the near approach of the Kingdom of God, or the rule of God upon the earth.

3. What he demanded—repentance and belief of the gospel (v. 15). He showed that the way to get ready for the coming of the Kingdom is to repent and believe the gospel of Christ's death for sin, and his coming to administer the affairs of righteousness upon the earth.

III. The Divine Servant Calling Associates (vv. 16-20).

Knowing that his ministry would be short, he called to definite fellowship men to continue the work after he was gone.

1. Who they were (vv. 16, 19). Simon and Andrew, James and John—two pairs of brothers. It is usually wise to engage in the Lord's service in fellowship—in pairs. This is not only necessary for effective testimony, but for protection of the witnesses. These men had become Christ's disciples, for at the word of John the Baptist they had beheld the "Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1:36-42). This is always the Lord's way. He calls men and women to be his disciples and then calls them to have fellowship with him in service.

2. From what they were called (vv. 16-20). They were called from business and family connections. In looking for men worth while, we should expect to find them busily engaged. James and John left their father and his servants. The call of God involves sacrifice and separation.

3. To what they were called (v. 17). To become fishers of men. These men, no doubt, had been successful as fishers. The qualities which made them good fishermen; namely: patience, bravery which led them to face the storm at night, and perseverence which led him to toil all night though no fish were caught, would make them good fishers of men. Winning souls for Christ requires patience, bravery and perseverence.

4. Obedience of the disciples (vv. 18-20). Obedience to Christ's call meant sacrifice, painful separation. It means to give up business interests. They yielded prompt obedience. They put their trust in him who called them, believing that he was able to supply all their needs.

5. Their reward (v. 17). These four men have wielded wondrous influence in the world. Their names have become immortalized. Had they remained at their business they would only have been humble fishermen.

God Does Nothing Amiss

However bitter the cup we have to drink, we are sure it contains nothing unnecessary or unkind; and we should take it from his hand with as much meekness as we accept of eternal life with thankfulness.—William Goodell.

Dumb Christians

If you had a child that was deaf and dumb, you would think it a great misfortune. Do you ever think how many dumb children God has?—D. L. Moody.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 5, 1933.

EVENTS OF 1932

Probably the most sensational event of 1932 was the kidnapping of the Lindbergh baby. That foul deed, followed so soon by a tragic end, was like a flash of lighning on a stormy night, revealing to the nation the dangerous path of crime and lawlessness it has been treading.

The prospective change of political administration at Washington is viewed with mixed feelings. To the victors of November 8, it is the normal abandonment of policics that have proved futile. To the vanquished it was a useless gesture of disappointment and anger. Results will prove which view was right. The world has been fighting to recover its economic balance, unsettled by unemployment and financial disasters. An extensive program of reconstruction measures was adopted by Congress, but other acts of helpfulness are called for.

Controversies over the war debts have embittered international relations, and constitute an obstacle to recover. The failure of several nations, led by France, to pay debt instalments when due was one result of the financial earthquakes through which we have passed. These debt questions are an unsettled legacy of trouble for the new administration to handle.

The year has not been happy. But do we not exagerate our troubles? When we read of people waiting for hours in long lines in Russia for food and clothing that never comes, America, with its streets filled with shiny automobiles, does not seem so sad. Our people show wonderful self control. We are preparing to turn over the government to a new administration, and no revolutionist or dissenter will get excited enough to fire off a toy pistol. The distress of the needy is met by a superb system of eharity. There is much to be done, but we have much to be thankful for.

IN DAYS OF OLD

FORTY YEARS AGO

Ice twelve inches thick was being harvested at Youghiogheny Lake, located east of Mountain Lake Park, and owned by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company. The ice was 11 inches thick on the lake at Mountain Lake Park.

The Masonic fraternity planned a banquet at the Glades Hotel at which Grand Officers of the organization were to be present.

Epworth League officers of St. Paul's M. E. church were installed as follows: F. A. Thayer, president; Arthur Townshend, 1st vice-president. Other officers were C. S. Davis, A. D. Naylor, Mrs. Kate Crane, J. C. Peddicord and Miss Kate Spedden.

Junior Order officers included E. I. West, W. F. King, John Legge, J. C. Peddicord, George Little, Perry E. Kimmell, J. W. Whorton, Hamill Casteel, G. D. Chisholm, J. C. Dunham, J. O. Cleveland, John W. Arnold, Eli Williams and A. S. Teats.

An account was given of the burning of the court house in Cumberland.

The dwelling house of William Browning, Pine Swamp, was burned and only a few household articles were saved from the fire.

The New Year opened with rain and hail, which was followed by quite a snow storm.

TWENTY YEARS AGO

A summer school for Garrett county, to be conducted in Oakland, was planned by the Board of Education.

Mr. Scott T. Jones was exhiblting valuable and exceedingly rare relics in the form of money, one being a dollar bill issued prior to the Revolutionary War by an act of the Colonlal government of Maryland. It was found in the debris following the Johnstown flood.

A heavy snow storm struck in the vicinity of Grantsville, following a few days of good weather. Drifts were so deep as to render traveling well nigh impossible At Mountain Lake Park the rains were interfering with shipments of ice from the lake. About twelve hundred tons were stored in the ice house.

Following an order from the Board of Health, offices of local physicians were crowded with children waiting their turns to be vaccinated.

J. M. Stanton, local drayman, lost two horses, one dropping dead while hitched to the wagon he was driving and the other dying following an injury it received by falling upon the ice.

TAKING STOCK

Business concerns face the tedious and sometimes anxious job of the annual inventory. In prosperous times, the proprietors face this task with joyful anticipation of profits. But in slow days they don't look so smiling, and it is not an opportune time to approach them with requests to sign subscription papers.

The concern that takes its inventory faithfully, determined to face the facts whatever they are, is the one whose heads are greeted with a warm smile at the bank, and who don't have to argue about loans when they need them. Such a concern knows where its losses are, it will never go far into the hole, and it will make money while some are losing.

"Whatever you do," said Alva Gortner to his new clerk, "be sure to keep every light burning in the store day and night. It attracts customers."

"No," said Bernard Gonder, in response to a prospective customer's question, "tonight's show is not much force."

"If I can't have spinach and carrots," shrieked Eleanor Sincell, "I won't eat my candy."

Bill Whorton's face was flushed in anger. "I'm so devilish mad," he said, "that I am tempted to tell him to go to heck."

"Bend down and let me whisper something in your ear," said Kathleen Lawton to Harry Stemple.

She was hostess at the biggest social event of the year, but she asked us to keep it out of the paper.

"I never use hair tonics," stated Bill Butt. "I attribute my head of hair to a good rub-down twice a day."

"No, thanks; I never touch the stuff."

After having been accused of celebrating the Fourth of July a little previous, I will kindly explain the machine-gun like explosions which occurred Tuesday evening about 5:30. The boss editor said Christmas was over. Andalusia Harned and Ikey Sincell unhooked the light cord of the curb Christmas tree and left one end hanging loosely to a lower limb.

Scene II, same act. Along comes Ford occupied by none other than Mrs. Scoop—in person. Gets Lizzie Tish, girl in front office, and starts for home. Light cord becomes mixed up with front fender and explosions sound like exhaust. However Christmas tree still remains. After bulbs are spread from Republican office to residence of Joseph Harned, cord and sockets become sleigh bells. Lizzie Tish said later she just thought the Ford had developed a new rattle.

Oh, well; next Christmas is a long way off, thank heaven, and by that time I will have received my Christmas savings check. I always knew it would come in handy.

The news item last week in the Accident letter about a miss marrying a Mrs. has been found to be a little from the truth. Just an "s" out of the way.

If the person who sent me a very delightful Christmas present for my fireplace will make himself known it will lift a great burden from my mind.

In a few words of appreciation of the work the pastor had done in the organization of the St. Paul's orchestra, and his leadership, Mr. Emmett Miller presented the pastor with a Gilbert electric mantle clock on behalf of the organization. The pastor replied to the presentation and desired to thank them for the spirit which had prompted such an expression of appreciation, and trusted that a larger development in this work should come during during the coming year. The orchestra now has eighteen members.

Shortly before the midnight hour the pastor led the assembly in a devotional period, in which poems were read by Miss Mary Miller and Miss Lena Speicher bearing upon the New Year which was about to dawn. CONTEST OVER STATE'S ROADS LAWS IS LOOMING told them he would support a plan under which the State Roads Commissicn would take over the maintenance of the county roads. He said if the money were to be given over to the county road bodies, as suggestd by the association, it would result in impending the program of the state roads body.

It also was the view of the State Tax Survey Commission that there should be an absorption by the State Roads Commission into the state highway system of all county roads, the cost of additional maintenance to be met by funds now allocated to the state body. That report said the suggested plan would relieve the counties of road taxation to the extent of about $1,700,000 and Baltimore City to the extent of about $700,000.

In putting forward their plans several of these groups as well as a number of individual students of the problem have advocated temporary discontinuance of highway construction in order to save funds.

County Delegates Opposed To Scheme

In answer to the questionairres sent out by the Associated Press of the members of the legislature who answered, a majority expressed disapproval of the suggestion that the county roads work be turned over to the State Roads Commission—most of them on the grounds that it would give the state body too much power—while a majority did favor the distribution of the gasoline tax funds to the counties and Baltimore as proposed by the association of county commissioners.

Apparently it will be up to the members of the legislature to work out some plan designed to bring about a change in this law and at the same time will be a compromise which will find enough support to get both legislative and executive approval.

oline tax levied for grade-crossing elimination—a purpose for which it cannot now be used—to the retirement of State road bonds, which are at present amortized from the general treasury.

A luxury tax on tobacco, soft drinks and chewing gum. He estimated this would produce at least $2,000,000 annually, of which the city of Baltimore would receive one-half and the remainder be distributed pro rata among the counties.

Reduction of the legal rate for county school levies from 67 cents to 60 cents by a ten per cent reduction in teachers' salaries.

Diversion to the counties for maintenance and construction of county roads of the present one and a half cent lateral road construction gasoline tax with supervision retained by the State Roads Commission.

An increase in Baltimore city's share of the two-cent gasoline tax increase in the city's share of the revenue from motor vehicle licenses to permit construction.

A bond issue to take care of Baltimore City's $8,000,000 relief expenditures to be amortized by payments from the city's share of the luxury taxes.

A state bond issue totaling $2,523,000 for construction work and for funding a portion of the state's contribution to the teachers' retirement fund in the next two years.

Salary Cut Approved

The first measure to be put through either branch appeared in the House as a forerunner to Governor Ritchie's economy plea. It was a resolution and called for a reduction of 20 per cent in the House appropriation for the payment of employes other than the desk officers.

BELIEVE MYSTERY MAN TO HAVE UNBALANCED MIND

Richard's Case Not Disposed Of In State of Michigan

Mental irresponsibility and not criminal intent is the reason for William King Richard's dilemma with authorities in Ann Arbor, Michigan, according to the statement of the University of Michigan's dean, J. A. Bursheh, to Prosecuting Attorney Shuman, made in a letter which reached the prosecutor at Morgantown on last Friday.

Earlier in the week Shuman had complied with a request for all local information on the "mystery man's" escapades while in Morgantown and Oakland nearly three months ago, and in reply the dean told the prosecutor he believes Richard to have an unbalanced mind.

Richard is detained there for promoting a "wildcat" financial scheme into which several Michigan students were drawn. As in Morgantown, Richard posed as a University student, but the hoax quickly was dispelled.

Shuman also disclosed that Richard escaped from a Minnesota sheriff enroute to a prison at New Elm, Minn., shortly before he arrived in Morgantown, that fact accounting for the scarcity of clothing the youth had. He still is a fugitive from Minnesota, but authorities there have made no effort to take him into custody.

His status in Ann Arbor depends, the University dean said, upon the attitude of the prosecuting attornay and judge.

Richard married a Morgantown girl at Oakland three days after he met her, deserted her two days later, then turned up at her home. The girl's mother in turn put officers on his trail and he was arrested, but gained his release when no criminal charge was made and the lunacy commission declared him sane.

DR. RILEY WARNS PEOPLE ABOUT INFLUENZA DANGER

Wave Of Disease Has Been Sweeping Across United States

Reports from widely-separated parts of Maryland to the State Department of Health show that the wave of influenza that has been sweeping across the United States has reached this part of the country. With these reports before him, Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the Maryland State Department of Health, issued the following warning:

"Colds, grippe, influenza, or whatever we may call them, are belived to be spread from person to person through discharges from the nose and throat. To protect yourself and others from such diseases, here are some things to be remembered and some precautions to be observed:

1. "Influenza is highly infectious. Practically everybody is susceptible to it. No matter how many times you may have had the disease, you may contract it again. Therefore, keep away from people who are sneezing, coughing, or sniffling, or who are actively ill with colds, influenza or pneumonia.

2. "Keep away from crowded places.

3. "Have your own towel and drinking cup and always wash your hands before eating.

4. "Keep yourself as fit as possible, by drinking plenty of water, by eating simple, nourishing food, by some exercise out of doors every day, by dressing according to the weather, by having plenty of sleep in a well-ventilated room, and by keeping the bowels regulated.

"Reports from other places indicate that the influenza prevalent this year has been rather mild in character and lasts for only a few days, but that in many instances, there is a second flare-up within two or three days that may be much more severe than the first attack. Mild attacks of this sort, if neglected, may open the way for serious complications or after-effects.

"Another characteristic observed in connection with this year's type of influenza is the marked prostration that accompanies many of the attacks. As a rule prostration means a lowering of the powers of resistance. Lowered resistance often opens the way for pneumonia and increases in pneumonia are always to be expected whenever we have serious outbreaks of influenza or gripp, unless special precautions to prevent after-effects are taken by those who are ill or who care for the sick.

"Therefore, if you feel an attack of grippe or influenza—or even of what you may think an ordinary cold—coming on, go to bed, send for your doctor, and do exactly as he tells you to do."

New England Accorded High Place in History

After the terrible drubbing she has taken in the last few years at the hands of authors, traveling salesmen and economists, there is a laurel wreath for New England in an article in Harper's Magazine by Bernard de Voto.

"New England is a finished place," declares the writer. "Its destiny is that of Florence, of Venice, not Milan, while the American empire careens onward toward its unpredicted end.

"It is the first American section to be finished, to achieve stability in the conditions of its life. It is the first old civilization, the first permanent civilization in America.

"If the world indeed faces into darkness, New England has the resources of the Yankee nature. They are not only the will to tighten one's belt and hang on. They contain the wisdom of three centuries whose teaching was, finally, defeat.

"The Yankee has experienced nothing but what he was taught to expect. Out of this wisdom, in his frigid climate, against the resistance of his granite fields, he built his commonwealth. It was a superb equipment for his past; it may not be a futile one for our future."

Norse Custom Kept Up by Shetland Islanders

The ancient Norse fire festival of Up-Helly-aa, which means the last of the holy yule days, is annually celebrated in Lerwick, Shetland Islands. In the last celebration three hundred "Guizers," carrying six-foot torches, took part in the torchlight procession, wearing brilliantly-colored costumes. They were led by stalwart "vikings." The leader of the Guizers, the Guizer Jarl, a commanding figure, wore a purple and orange cloak, aluminum coat of mail, and silver helmet surmounted by outspread ravens' wings. The Guizers fell in behind the full-size Norse war galley "Frithr," meaning friendship, with its towering dragon head and fish-like tail. The "Jarl" stood a solitary figure firmly grasping the starboard steering oar of the ship. A bugle call gave the signal to light up the torches, and then, accompanied by the singing of martial airs and band and pipe music, the procession moved through the streets of the town. Finally the torches are thrown into the valley, which is thus consigned to Valhalla. This ceremony recalls to Shetlanders the Norse custom of placing a dead warrior in his galley, setting it alight, and launching it on the sea.

Watt's Laurels Disputed

The laurels resting upon the head of James Watt, the reputed inventor of the steam engine, are in danger, for the director of the Technical museum in Stockholm has recently announced that he has discovered that a steam engine was built in Sweden in 1728, eight years before the birth of James Watt. The constructor was Maaroa Triewald, a Swedish professor of astronomy, and it was in active service for seven years at the Dennemora mines in that country until the engine was completely destroyed by lightning. The engine was never rebuilt, but Triewald left some drawings and a description of it and with the aid of his material a working model has been made and it is now on view at the Technical museum.

"America, I Love You"

America that is the United States of America and it is very interesting was throughout the Nineteenth century beginning living that is to say they were beginning living being made out of the Eighteenth century that is In all the Nineteenth century they were beginning living beginning and living in the Twentieth century. And now what are they to do. Having done something they must be. Looking backward. That is. Natural enough.

And how do you look backward? By looking forward. And what do you see? As they look forward. They see what they had to do before they could look backward. And there we have it all.—(Gertrude Stein in Creative Art).

Great Penal Institute

Sing Sing, the famous New York state prison, is located at Ossining, a town on the Hudson river about 30 miles north of New York city.

The town itself was originally also called Sing Sing, supposedly from the Sing Sing or Sintsink Indians who once lived in that vicinity. But in 1901 the name of the town was officially changed to Ossining. The inhabitants objected to the name Sing Sing because of its popular association with the penitentiary. Ossining is merely another form of Sing Sing, both words being corruptions of the Delaware Indian word assinesink, meaning, literally, "at the small stone."

Cutting Lumber for Profit

The forest products laboratory says that it is more costly to handle small trees than large ones, and the lumber sells for less per foot when cut. It gives the following smallest sizes that should be taken for maximum immediate profit per acre logged: In Arkansas second-growth forest short-leaf and loblolly pine, 12 inches; in Louisiana oldfield loblolly, 15 inches; in Virginia second-growth forest loblolly, 12 inches; in North Carolina oldfield loblolly, 11 inches; in Texas and western Arkansas virgin shortleft, 10 to 14 inches, according to type and age or stand.

THE COST OF HIGHWAYS

By
NICHOLAS BURGESS.
In the Baltimore Sunday Sun, January 1, 1933.

With one group of politicians and public-spirited citizens demanding more and more State and Federal relief work, and another group of politicians and equally public spirited citizens demanding reductions in taxes, it seems likely that this winter's session of Congress and our State Legislature will bring to light many new plans and principles, all expressly for the benefit of the people, and all in direct opposition to each other. If one were to digest all the schemes he would be either a master politician or a mental patient, with the odds on the latter, but it requires only casual examination to learn that a relief feature common to many plans is the construction of new roads.

Automobile traffic has increased so rapidly in recent years that a necessity for new roads apparently may be found in every section. Furthermore, road construction furnishes jobs for a relatively large number of men, and its benefits are enjoyed immediately by the average motorist-citizen.

At the last session of Congress the sum of $120,000,000 was appropriated to the States for work on Federal-aid highway systems. Of this sum Maryland was allotted $1,019,750, and projects utilizing this fund were started last fall by the State Roads Commission. The work is being divided among the various counties in accordance with the regulations imposed by Congress.

While, of course, this Federal aid is intended for a serious and worthy purpose, it is not without its humorous angle. For some fifteen years Congress has appropriated money for roads, with the provision that the States match the appropriations with an equal sum, but many States have passed up either thoir entire share or a large part of it. The last Congress, determined that it would help the States build roads, appropriated $120,000,000 with the provision that it be paid back out of future Federal aid, beginning in 1933.

But this was not the only restriction placed on a State's acceptance of its allotted share. It was further provided that former service men with dependents should be given preference in employment that manual labor methods be used as much as possible that a thirty-hour week be observed; that a minimum wage scale be established and set forth in the contracts, and that work be completed by July, 1933.

It is apparent that many controversies might arise in interpreting the restrictions; the question of labor alone has puzzled many engineers. A large part of road construction already is done by manual labor, even in this machine age, and questions have arisen over the extent to which modern machinery should be used. For instance, what about the cement mixer? And for that matter, is a pick or spade merely a tool, or is it a machine?

So dubious are some States over these provisions that they have been hesitant about accepting this "emergency" aid. Last summer one New England State's attitude was that it would be financially unsound to build new roads under these terms, which were expected to increase the cost considerably, through special accounting systems, changes in construction and employment methods, and the like.

Most States, with many unemployed citizens, have been willing to accept any reasonable form of assistance. The fact that the money does not have to be repaid until 1938, and then out of additional Federal aid, probably has encouraged acceptance of the help. Federal loans of this nature have a way of becoming cancelled after a few years, too, observers have noticed. Another factor which induces many of the States to accept such aid lies in the argument that, in the last analysis, it is their own money which they are using. Through its citizens each State contributes its share toward the expenses of the Federal Government, and any money which comes back from Washington is regarded as merely offsetting a part of the State's contribution.

Road building is generally considered one of the soundest forms of emergency relief—more so than postoffices, for example—and few persons have criticized the extension of Federal loan facilities to this work. After a recent analysis of the cost of road building, the United States Bureau of Public Roads reported that wages and salaries amount to 75 per cent or more of the total expenditures, bearing out the feasibility of road building to offset unemployment.

But whether or not Federal aid in normal years is economical for the various States is another question about which there is some controversy New York is our best example of a State which pays to the Federal Government much more money than it receives in Federal appropriations, while such sparsely settled States as Arizona or Nevada are cited as examples of those who receive more money through Federal aid than they pay in taxes. Somewhere in between these extremes is Maryland, which pays more than it receives, but not in such startling relationship as New York. Critics of this practice (among them Governor Ritchie) assert that it is unfair to tax the citizens of New York for new roads in Idaho; proponents declare that much of New York's wealth comes through its trade with other sections of the country, and that in a final analysis the matter stands nearly even.

Though Maryland has long opposed excessive Federal bureaucracy, it has found the road-building system quite satisfactory, being one of the few States which have taken advantage of all Federal appropriations for roads since the practice was begun. It is generally held that so long as the money is available the State might just as well use it, providing it fits in with the general road plan.

While Federal appropriations are likely to receive considerable attention in times such as these, Harry D. Williar, Jr., chief engineer of the State Roads Commission, points out that the basis income of the commission comes from within the State and that Federal funds form only a small part of the total expenditures. During 1931, for example, the commission's total receipts were about $14,000,000, of which $1,730,000 came from Washington. This sum, incidentally, was somewhat larger than that Maryland usually receives, since it included the normal as well as an emergency appropriation.

The most important single source of revenue last year was the 4 cents a gallon gasoline tax, which yielded about $6,500,000, or forty-six per cent of the total From license fees, fines, etc., collected by the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles, came $2,400,000; from county bonds, $1,200,000; from a special bridge loan $1,000,000; from railways, $450,000; from sign permits, $9,000.

Thus through gasoline taxes and license fees and the like automobile users paid directly some sixty-three per cent of the Road Commission's income. A portion of the balance might be traced to tax-paying citizens who do not own or drive automobiles, a situation which frequently brings forth protests.

Under the present system, of the 4 cents tax collected on each gallon of gasoline, 2 cents goes into the fund for maintenance and reconstruction of the present road system. One and a half cents is allotted to the construction of new lateral roads, and the remaining half cent goes toward the elimination of railroad grade crossings. This division is provided for by State law. Funds from the Motor Vehicle Commission are expended for maintenance and reconstruction, the proceeds of special county bond issues are used for specified new roads, State appropriations usually are made for such specific projects as new bridges or certain roads, and the money secured from sign permits goes into roadside beautification. Federal funds may be used either for reconstruction or new roads, with the provision that the work be done on roads which are part of the Federal or interstate system.

Since any or all of these sources of revenue may vary from year to year, the Roads Commission operates on a somewhat elastic budget and maps out its work in accordance with the funds available. A State law provides that income from part of the gasoline tax shall be divided among the twenty-three counties and Baltimore City, hence the commission works in cooperation with county and city engineers in planning new projects. This does not apply to the administration of Federal funds, however, which are controlled entirely by the commission.

With half of the proceeds from the gasoline tax going into maintenance and reconstruction of existing roads, it might appear at first glance that these costs are excessive. However, under this heading goes the widening and rebuilding of roads, changes in curves and grades and the like, so that actually most of this fund is expended for road building. Maintenance, of course, is an important feature, for it has been found much more economical to repair small breaks early than to wait until major repairs are needed. Baltimore City receives twenty per cent of this fund directly, with the remainder divided among the counties.

The one and one-half cent tax, which is used for the construction of new laternl roads or roads feeding into main highways, is similarly divided among the counties and Baltimore City. In this case the city's twenty per cent has been held by the Roads Commission and expended by that body for the construction of arterial routes into and through Baltimore. For 1933, however, the commission has decided to make the city's share of this tax available for highway maintenance, installation of storm-water drains and the acquisition of rights of way for new streets, in addition to construction work. The arrangement is intended to help the city in its present emergency, and is not intended to be a permanent change. The sum, which has been estimated to be $743,000, has enabled the city to cut approximately 8 cents from the proposed 1933 tax rate.

The half-cent tax for the elimination of railroad grade crossings has attracted attention recently through a proposal to divert it into the general tax fund. This work of eliminating railway grade crossings, by building either overhead or underpass structures, is paid for equally by the State and the railroad concerned. The tax revenues are divided among the counties and Baltimores city in the same ratio as are other parts of the gasoline funds.

It has been stated that the railroads are not financially able to go ahead with their share of grade-crossing elimination at present, and it is also claimed that the diversion of this tax would materially lower the State tax rate. But protests have arisen from other citizens who contend the roads should receive all the proceeds of the gasoline tax, and that grade-crossing elimination is an important feature which can be carried out in many instances by road relocations instead of special structures, and those who favor direct taxation point out that to divert part of the gasoline tax into the general fund would be to move farther from their objective.

In past years various counties have financed new roads with special bond issues, the object being to secure the roads at once instead of building them from year to year with proceeds from the gasoline tax. The counties liquidate these bonds from their share of subsequent gasoline taxes, but at present not many are embarking on such ventures. State funds, derived from the sale of bonds, are usually authorized by the General Assembly for a particular purpose, as a certain stretch of road or specified bridge.

It appears likely that the matter of roads and gasoline taxes will be examined closely during the session of the General Assembly. County officials have advanced plans calling for a change in the distribution of funds obtained from gasoline tax, automobile license fees and fines assessed for violation of the State motor laws. By obtaining a larger share of these funds for county highways, as distinguished from the State system of roads, the counties hope to be able to reduce their own tax rates. They now maintain some county roads from their general funds, and part of the plan is to make the gasoline tax and other automobile fees pay all, or nearly all, of county road expenses. Legislation in the General Assembly to effect a change in the present system has been predicted hy E. Brooke Lee, a member of the State Roads Commission.

The question of who pays for the roads under the present system apparently is attracting more and more attention. Motorists who contribute 5 cents tax on each gallon of gasoline (the Federal tax of 1 cent added to the State's 4-cent impost), along with taxes on oil, tires and tubes and other items, probably feel that they are bearing the cost on their own shoulders, but even these taxes have not been sufficient to meet the entire bill. A few years ago, when the gasoline tax idea was first advocated, it was predicted that automobils license fees would be lowered correspondingly, but despite the fact that the gasoline tax now is an integral part of the system, license fees and property taxes on automobiles remain unchanged—or have gone higher. Even with these taxes it appears that many persons who do not own or drive automobiles are still paying for part of the costs of new roads, through real property taxes within the State and through income taxes to the Federal Government.

This system probably has its merits, because roads and streets are generally regarded as a part of the public improvement program, in the benefits of which all citizens share to some degree. Lower returns from gasoline taxes in recent months are arousing suspicions that this form of revenue has its limits, too, like the 3-cent postage stamp.

The Ohio Chamber of Commerce's recent study of highway costs from 1923 to 1930, based on data from the United States Bureau of Public Roads, lists the sources of road funds for the entire country, and indicates the changes in the system during that period. In 1923 $200,000,000 was raised hy gasoline taxes and motor vehicle fees while in 1930 the total from this source was $826,000,000. During the same period funds obtained from general taxes rose from nearly $600,000,000 to almost $700,000,000. The greatest proportional increase was registered by funds obtained from bond issues, which grew rapidly from $100,000,000 to $700,000,000.

Some observers see cause for alarm in this apparent tendency to build roads out of future income, particularly when such a large proportion of the funds are secured in this manner and when the annual amount increases steadily. They point out that most highway bonds are for periods ranging from twenty to fifty years, while the life of the average road surface is nearer ten years. The result will be that future taxpayers will be paying for roads which long since have had to be rebuilt or repaired extensively.

One of the most interesting problems in connection with highways is that of the railroads. For some years the latter have complained of growing competition from trucks and busses, and in recent months they have blamed a part of their difficulties on this traffic. Railroad partisans state that the iron horse is loaded down with taxes, right-of-way expenses and other costs, while the competitors are allowed to use highways built at public expense. Through their own taxes, assert the railroads, they even help to build the highways over which travel their most troublesome competitors, the trucks and busses.

To this the trucks and busses have a ready answer, stating that through license fees, property taxes, and the gasoline tax they pay their share of the cost of road construction and maintenance. In connection with the gasoline tax they point out that through very low mileage to the gallon, heavy vehicles pay much more to the mile than passenger automobiles, and they cite the difference in license fees as further evidence of their increased expenses.

At this point the argument seems to rest. With widespread relief measures being advocated for the railroads, and millions of dollars of public money already lent to them, there appears to be a need for conclusive evidence on this phase of the situation. The railroads think the matter could be adjusted either by lowering their taxes materially or by boosting the taxes paid by their competitors. Some of the bus and truck firms say a raise in taxes would drive them out of business, although of course the raise would be passed on to their customers. Other observers contend that truck and bus competition, while serious, really is nothing like a fatal threat to the railroads; that a return to normal business conditions will restore most of the railroads' profits.

With taxes and governmental expenses undergoing a closer scrutiny than usual, it is likely that the motorist will hear more about the question of roads and expenses. Perhaps the nation will even come closer to a more definite roads program, so that everyone may know just who pays for the roads—and how much.

MT. LAKE PARK

The M. E. Church Observance

We received a "jacking up" from a friend for omitting to mention in this column last week the observance of Christmas at the church on the hill. We assured him that our failure was not intentional, but not being used to so many "goings on" at the Park during the winter months, we simply overlooked it. Now that we have apologized, we can truthfully say that the comments by many on the observance at the M. E. church on Christmas night are most flattering. The concensus of opinion is that it was the most delightful and representative observance of any held in the Park for a number of years. The church was filled to capacity and a pageant portraying the Birth of the Christ was enacted by the adult members of the congregation with feeling and reverence. The singing by the members of the Sunday school was much enjoyed. The pantomime enacted by the Misses Welch and Middaugh was highly appreciated by the audience, as was also the renditlon of the Holy City by Miss Moon.

Peace on earth and good will to men was the spirit most outstanding here during the Christmas festivities with an evident desire on the part of those sponsoring the programs to do their bit to ease the strain under which many are now staggering during these upside-down times.

Legislative Rumblings

There are persistent rumors that a drastic bill will be introduced in the General Assembly looking to the repeal of measures heretofore passed granting municipalities franchises to certain towns. We are not advised of the specific intent of the proposed bill nor what towns in Maryland it will affect. It would really be too bad if, just when any feeling which may have been engendered over the fight last session which resulted in the incorporation of Mountain Lake Park, is dying out, to again fan the flames and revive the old animosities and jealousies. We trust any bill introduced will not have that effect, for just now all seems peaceful and harmonious along the banks of the old Youghiogheny.

Married Fifty-nine Years

The following item deserves something more than a mere "personal" mention:

On January 1, Mr. and Mrs. James A. Enlow observed their fifty-ninth wedding anniversary. As the span of life is measured that is a long time to be happily married—especially in these times of hasty marriages and quick and easy divorces. To the younger generation it would seem an especially long time if they would consider that U. S. Grant had just been re-elected President of the United States; that the one cent postal cards had been issued only the year before and that many inventions, now seeming common place to us, were the wonders of the day.

Mr. and Mrs. Enlow have spent fifty years of their married life in this immediate community, and by their exemplary and Christian life have won the respect and esteem of their friends and neighbors. We know we express the sentiment of all when we wish for them many more years of life together.

The Weather

Our column would not be complete if we failed to mention something about the weather as now prevailing. While we have had some right snappy mornings, yet take it by and large the weather man has been rather nice. Take for instance Tuesday and yesterday. The sun has been shining quite a little and the air a kind of tangy mildness. Just as we had written that sentence the wind began to sweep down the glade and tie itself in a double bow-knot in the branches of the leafless trees. Let us hope, however, that the old saying "ice that will bear a man before Christmas will not bear a mouse after," will prove true.

Personal Mention

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Oswell have returned to the Park from a brief visit with friends in Baltimore and Washington.

Mrs. Thomas A. Deveny, of Fairmont, and Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Deveny, Jr., of Charleston, W. Va., spent a day this week in the Park.

Mrs. Bessie McCullough and son Gale, of West Liberty, W. Va., were here part of Monday and Tuesday visiting friends.

All the sons and daughters of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Chance, except Mrs. Welch, were guests at their home in the Park on New Year's Day.

Postmaster Leighton is on a business trip to Cincinnati, Ohio.

WOULD RALLY TAXPAYERS TO BACK TAX PROGRAM

County Representatives Have Called Citizens' Meeting For Saturday Morning In Oakland

DRAFTS MADE OF 2 BILLS

Representatives of sixteen Maryland counties left a meeting of the County Commissioners' Association held at Annapolis last Friday with a plan to gain a substantial backing from the voters of the State for four bills to be presented to the Legislature for the general reduction of taxes.

Massmeetings of taxpayers at the several county Court Houses have been called for Saturday, January 14, when the proposed bills will be read and discussed with the object of gaining approval of the tax reform at which time also resolutions urging the backing of the bills by the Senator and members of the House will be presented and their adoption urged.

Two of Bills Completed

At Annapolis meeting two of the bills were read in their final form before the gathering of forty county representatives. The others have now been completed by the legislative committee of the association and will be read at the meeting to be held on Saturday.

The bill changing the minimum rate to be levied by a county before it shares in the State school equalization fund from 67 cents to 40 cents was approved unanimously by the delegates at the meeting on Friday.

Would Save Court Costs

Petty larcenies of goods valued at less than $25 would be classed as misdemeanors which could be disposed of by magistrates under a second bill approved by the commissioners. In the discussion following its reading by W. Clinton McSherry, chairman of the Legislative Committee, it was argued

Representative Samuel Kendall Kills Self At Capitol

Representative Samuel Austin Kendall, 73, Republican from the 24th Pennsylvania district, took his own life in his room at the House office building in Washington, after writing a note saying grief over the loss of his wife was the cause.

The body was found sitting in a big leather chair by the office windows, a bullet hole through his head and a pistol clasped in his right hand lying in his lap.

Representative Kendall was well known in this section, having lived in Meyersdale for a number of years. He was a brother of Mrs. Abigail Baker, of Crellin, who is the only surviving member of the family. He was also a brother to the late J. C. Kendall, of Crellin.

Mr. Kendall was born on a farm in Somerset county, Pa., November 1, 1859, the son of John C. and Elizabeth Kendall. He served fourteen years in the House and was defeated for re-election in November, but his son said that apparently he had been unmoved by his defeat. He was a popular member among the postal employes. He has three children surviving.

WINS SCHOLARSHIP AWARD FOR BEING OUTSTANDING

Wayne Hamilton, O. H. S., Presented $100 by B. & O. R. R.

Wayne Hamilton, son of Mr. and Mrs. James F. Hamilton, of near Oakland, and now a student in Blue Ridge College, has been awarded a scholarship of $100 by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad for being the most outstanding student in vocational agriculture in the high schools of the counties of the State through which the railroad passes.

The money has been placed with officials of the University of Maryland where the youthful student expects to continue his studies along agricultural lines after the conclusion of his work at Blue Ridge.

The award was made by O. K. Quivey, agriculture agent of the Baltimore and Ohio, in connection with the meeting of the Farm Bureau meeting held in Baltimore on January 5. The young man attended the meeting as did also his father and Mr. W. E. Spoerlein, of Gortner.

Wayne was also presented a gold medal in the State-wide potato project contest, and Boyd Hardesty, Hutton, won second honors.

During his four years' at Oakland High School young Hamilton was an outstanding student in agriculture. He was vice-president of the State F. F. A. and was on the winning demonstration team at the Frederick Fair in 1931 and was also a member of the cattle and poultry judging teams during his high school days.

OAKLAND HIGH WILL PLAY BAYARD IN OPENING GAME

First Home Battles of Season To Be Staged Friday Night

Oakland High school basketball teams will meet the Bayard High School teams in their first home games of the season at the Oakland High gymnasium on Friday evening, January 13, beginning at 7:45 o'clock.

The boys' team of the local school won the county championship last year and put up a hard struggle against Allegany High School, Cumberland, State champions, and the members are pointing for another championship.

With Miss Mary Humphreys and John M. Thayer, coaches of the respective teams, daily practice sessions have been held in preparation for the opening home games. Last year Bayard defeated both the local teams.

The probable girls' lineup will include Kitty Rice, Lena Lambert, Stella Lucas and Mary Peddicord, guards; Virginia Fraley, Kitty Wooddell, Elizabeth Browning and Dora Spoerlein, forwards.

The probable boys' lineup will include Joe Rice, Fred. Peddicord, Richard Wolfe, forwards; George Kerins, center; and James Compton, Robert Lohr and Charles Davis, guards.

Oakland High girls won from Salisbury, Pa., High School girls Tuesday night at Salisbury, 15 to 0, but the boys lost 42 to 21 to the boys' team.

Rice and Wolfe started at forwards, Kerins at center and Lohr and Compton at guards, but before the battle was over C. Davis, W. Turney and F. Peddicord saw service. Joe Rice made twenty of the local team's twenty-one points, while Wolfe contributed the foul goal.

Homemakers Clubs Start Program for 1933

"Mrs. Consumer and Her Buying Standards" will be the topic for consideration in Homemakers' Clubs throughout the county during the coming year, according to Miss Margaret K. Burtis, home demonstration agent.

The objective of the program is to find how to maintain good standards on a limited income through better buying practices and better use of home products.

Since it is known that women do 85% of all reatil purchasing it is necessary that each housewife get the best value possible out of every dollar spent.

The January meetings will include "Management of Clothing Expenditures."

"Next to food, clothing is one of the largest items in the family's expenses," Miss Burtis said, "and it is one that requires cash. Buying the right thing at the right time and at the right price, means to buy intelligently," she concluded.

HEART ATTACK FATAL TO EX-PRESIDENT COOLIDGE

Thirtieth President of United States Is Striken Thursday At Northampton Home

FUNERAL HELD SATURDAY

Calvin Coolidge, the thirtieth President of the United States, was striken at noon on Thursday, January 5, with a heart attack while alone in a dressing room of his home, and died almost immediately. Mrs. Coolidge, returning from a shopping tour, discovered his body lying on the floor where he apparently had fallen as he went to his room to rest and recover from what he thought was a minor attack of stomach trouble. He was 60 years old on July 4.

Funeral services were held in the Edwards Congregational church auditorium in Northampton, Mass., on Saturday, January 7, and his body was laid to rest in Plymouth, Vt., where six generations of Coolidges are buried.

Left Office Because of Illness

With his secretary, Mr. Coolidge had returned home from his law office for luncheon earlier than usual because he felt ill. But he had suffered from what he thought was indigestion for two or three weeks and neither he nor his secretary regarded the attack as serious.

Scarcely had the news of the death been flashed to the world than a stream of tributes poured in. President Hoover paid tribute to Mr. Coolidge as a man whose name was known as a "synonym for sagacity and wisdom." Both the national Senate and House of Representatives adjourned in respect to the memory of the former Chief Executive and Congressional leaders, regardless of political faith, joined in eulogizing him.

President Hoover, in a public proclamation, declared a period of mourning for thirty days.

E. S. EVANS' LARGE BARN IS CONSUMED BY FLAMES

Seventy Head of Cattle Driven To Safety, But Loss Is Heavy

The large stock barn on the E. S. Evans farm, two miles north of Oakland, on Route 37, and all its contents were consumed by fire of undetermined origin on Tuesday afternoon, about one o'clock, entailing a loss of between eight thousand and ten thousand dollars, partially covered by insurance.

The Oakland Fire Department was called and reached the scene of the blaze about ten minutes after the alarm had been turned in, but the building was then a mass of flames.

Approximately seventy tons of oats straw and clover hay stored in the barn added to the heat, which was intense.

About seventy head of dairy cattle which were in and about the barn were saved, and an electrical milking equipment in the stabling section of the building was also saved by the firemen and workmen about the farm after the heat in the upper part of the structure had subsided to some extent.

The lower or stable portion of the building was constructed of steel and cement and had a large number of metal stanchions, which had been erected less than two years ago at a cost of approximately $2,000.

There was very little reserve water supply on the farm and the streams from the hose of the fire company were only effective in preventing the spread of the flames to other nearby builings.

The barn was one of the most modern in this community and was quite substantially built.

Russell Stover occupies the dwelling on the farm and people who discovered the fire thought it had been caused by defective wiring. The blaze had its inception in the southeast corner of the building adjacent to the roof.

Called To McHenry

The local firemen were called to McHenry on Saturday about noon when a stack of hay, located in a field near the church of that village was discovered to be burning and it was feared that the flames would be communicated to the church. Aside from burning the hay on other damage resulted, however.

GARRETT COUNTY 'STILL" OPERATORS ARE ARRESTED

Four Are Held By Federal Authorities for Liquor Violations

Three stills were seized and four alleged violators were arrested by Federal Investigators W. H. Lightborn and Leon Poore, on Friday.

The officers stated Leo M. Rowan and Lester Paugh are being held for the action of the Garrett county grand jury. Both men were arrested in Vindex, where an alleged liquor plant was being operated in Rowan's residence. The officers said they seized a 100-gallon still, 23 gallons of alleged whiskey and 20 barrels of alleged whiskey mash.

Richard Harvey and Edward Harvey, of near Shaw, were arrested and held under $500 bond each for the action of the Garrett county grand jury. The officers said they seized a 15-gallon still and a five-gallon still purported to belong to the men. A small quantity of mash was also taken in the raid.

AUTO WRECK NEAR FINZEL KILLS TWO; INJURES TWO

Cumberland Boy and Girl Die of Broken Necks—Two Others In Machine Cut and Bruised

SECOND MISHAP ON ROAD

Pinioned under a small roadster which plunged from the new Finzel raod about eight or ten miles east of Grantsville, at a point near where the highway crosses into the State of Pennsylvania after leaving Garrett county, Miss Alleda Willison, 19, and Victor C. Lucas, 18, both of Cumberland, were instantly killed shortly after 9 o'clock Saturday night. Two other occupants of the car were injured, neither seriously.

Lucas was driving the car, with Miss Willison beside him, police were told, when he apparently lost control as the machine rounded a curve. The auto struck a tree and turned over several times before the gasoline tank exploded, igniting the machine.

Miss Gretchen Lucas, sister of the mishap victime, and Garfield Marsh, 22, of Westernport, were riding in the rumble seat Marsh succeeded in extricating himself and removed his three companions from the wreckage before the flames reached them. The automobile was destroyed by the fire.

Passing motorists took the victims to the Miners' Hospital, Frostburg, where they were attended by Dr A. R. Walker. Miss Willison and Lucas suffered broken necks and were badly crushed. Dr. Walker pronounced them dead at the hospital. Marsh suffered minor cuts and bruises and was able to leave the hospital. Miss Lucas, who suffered severe bruises and cuts about the head and body, remained in the hospital. Her condition is not regarded as scrious.

The car, traveling toward Meyersdale, Pa., left the road about 200 feet from the Maryland line, in Somerset county, Pa. The new Finzel road, completed in recent months, connects with the National Highway at the top of Little Savage Mountain.

John Rembold, of Somerset county, Pa., was killed last November, and his son was badly injured, when their car left the road and crashed into the same tree that was struck by the car operated by Lucas. Mr. Rembold was a son of Joseph Rembold, of this county.

Officer George J. Miller, of the State Police, assisted Pennsylvania State Police in investigating the accident.

Both Miss Willison and young Lucas were highly respected in Cumberland. Their funerals took place on Tuesday afternoon.

The scene of the fatal mishap was visited Sunday by hundreds of motorists. From the marks left on the tree into which the car plunged, it is believed the machine sideswiped the trunk and then turned over several times. The bark of the tree is torn off about five feet from the ground.

COBLENTZ TO BE ASKED BY HIS PARTY TO QUIT SENATE

Formal Step Planned For Tuesday If Frederick Countian Fails To Accede To Demands

COMMITTEES ANNOUNCED

Annapolis, Jan. 11.—A resolution calling on Senator Emory L. Coblentz to resign as Frederick county's representative in the State Senate is being prepared for presentation when the General Assembly reconvenes next week, it was learned today.

Meanwhile, it is understood, Democratic leaders and Senate colleagues will wait on the Frederick county Senator and advise him to submit his resignation to avoid the necessity of taking formal action against him on the floor.

Senator Coblentz was convicted last summer by the Circuit Court of Allegany county on charges of accepting deposits in a branch of the defunct Central Trust Company of Frederick, of which he was president, knowing the institution to be insolvent. Other indictments are pending against him in connection with the banking chain's failure in Howard, Carroll and Frederick counties.

Appeal Is Pending

An appeal from the Allegany county court's conviction, which was on one of several indictments in Howard county, now is before the Court of Appeals.

Considerable pressure has been brought to bear on the Senators in the Western Maryland and Central Maryland section adjacent to Frederick county to force Senator Coblentz's withdrawal from the Senate, it is understood, and the result of this was the decision to make a demand for his resignation by resolution.

It is reported that suggestions already have been made to the Frederick county representative that he at least absent himself from sessions of the General Assembly until the Court of Appeals decides on the Allegany court's conviction.

Present At Sessions

Senator Coblentz has attended the three meetings held thus far by the Legislature but, at his own request, was relieved of the chairmanship of two committees which he held in the 1931 session. During the last session he was head of the Education Commit-

REDUCTION MAY BE MADE HERE IN RATES FOR GAS

May Mean a Saving of 12 Percent to Consumers, is Estimate

That the Cumberland and Allegheny Gas company would probably make a voluntary reduction in the gas rates in this vicinity, was announced by S. H. Jackson, local manager. He was unable to give the exact figures but estimated that it would mean a saving of approximately 12 percent to people of Oakland and surrounding towns.

The gas rate was voluntarily reduced in the Cumberland area, which will mean a savings annually of approximately $30,000 there. A reduction at this time will not only afford relief through the winter months to the small consumer but will also enable the users of gas for house-heating purposes to continue this convenience at appreciably reduced and lowered prices.

While there has been no official notification, Mr. Jackson is of the opinion that the following rates will be effective this month and the months to follow: 80 cents per thousand for the first two thousand cubic feet used per month; 70 cents per thousand for the next two thousand cubic feet used per month; and 60 cents per thousand for all over four thousand cubic feet used per month.

The present rates are 80 cents per thousand for the first five; 70 cents per thousand for the next five; and 60 cents per thousand for all over ten thousand.

Desire Appointment as Justice of the Peace

Although no official announcements have been made, it is understood that there are four candidates for the appointment of the position of justice of the peace, made vacant by the death of A. S. Teats, recently.

The four who are said to be candidates are H. A. Loraditch, Lee R. Mason, Howard Stuck, and E. I. Baumgartner.

Lesson for January 15

JESUS AT WORK

Mark 1:21-45.

GOLDEN TEXT—But Jesus answered them, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work. John 5:17.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Making a Sick Mother Well.

JUNIOR TOPIC—How Jesus Spent His Time.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Busy at Great Tasks.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Jesus Meeting Human Needs.

Mark's purpose in writing bis treatise should steadily be borne in mind; namely: the presentation of Jesus Christ as the divine Servant energetically performing the will of God. The purpose in this section is to show the divine Servant bearing God's message to, and clothed with power to save, lost souls. Coupled with his superhuman strength is the unwearied sympathy, giving itself out in helpful and saving service.

I. Jesus Teaching With Authority (vv. 21, 22).

1. The place (v. 21). It was in the synagogue in Capernaum to which he with four disciples repaired "straightway" upon his entrance into tbe village. He availed himself of the regular channel of instruction. Though many abuses had crept into the synagogue service, he chose to associate the new with the old order.

2. The time (v. 21). It was on the Sabbath day. His faithfulness in observing tbe Sabbath brought him to the place where the people assembled to worship and to hear the Scriptures expounded. He came not to destroy but to fulfill the law, even tbe law of the Sabbath day.

3. The impression made (v. 22). The people were astonished. Two things about his teaching impressed his hearers.

a. The substance of his message.

b. The authority of its deliverance. The scribes, the professional teachers of the law, merely quoted the authorities, but Jesus with first hand knowledge set forth the truth with the enthusiasm of freshness and personal conviction.

II. Jesus Conquering Demons (vv. 23-28).

1. The outcry of the demon-possessed man (v. 23). When the power of God is manifested in the presence of evil spirits, there is bound to be an outcry from them.

2. The demon's confession (v. 24). "Thou art the Holy One of God." The one whose chief business it was to waste and destroy human life was in such miserable state as to desire to have nothing to do with Christ, and yet was forced to confess him as the Holy One.

3. Christ's attitude toward the demon (v. 25). Christ neither asked for nor accepted testimony from tbe demon, but sternly rebuked and cast out the foul spirit. Christ is not only himself pure, but is also able to deliver others from impurity.

4. The obedience of the demon (v. 26). The evil spirit was reluctant to leave the man and displayed his maliciousness to the very end, for he tore the man whom be was forced to leave.

5. The impression made upon the people (vv. 27, 28). The news of Christ's power spread rapidly over Galilee. The people were startled by two things:

a. The new doctrine which he brought.

b. The authority over demons.

III. Jesus Heals Peter's Mother-in-Law of Fever (vv. 29-31).

Jesus went home with Simon and Andrew. While in that home he learned of the condition of Peter's mother-in-law. He came at once and lifted her up and the fever departed. Divine healing is characterized by completeness and immediacy. Divine healing is, in this respect, to be contrasted with so-called faith healing, which is merely the exercise of the power of mind over the body.

IV. Jesus Ministering to Many (vv. 32-34).

Though tbe day was strenuous in its labors, he came unwearied even when the sun had set, to meet the needs of the multitudes who had gathered from all parts of the city. He healed many of diseases, and cast out many demons. The demons knew him, but the poor blind people knew him not.

V. Jesus Cleansing a Leper (vv. 35-45).

As Jesus preached in the synagogues of Galilee and cast out demons, his power became widely known. A leper therefore came to him saying, "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." Jesus put forth his hand and touched him saying, "I will, be thou clean," and immediately the leprosy departed and he was cleansed.

Look for His Leading

As a general rule, those truths which we highly relish, and which shed a degree of practical light upon the things which we are required to give up for God, are leadings of Divine grace, which we should follow without hesitation.—Fenelon.

Thy Kingdom Come

If you do not wish his kingdom, don't pray for it. But if you do, you must do more than pray for it, you must work for it.—John Ruskin.

Fable of Go-Tell-Him

By GEORGE ADE

(©, Bell Syndicate.)—WNU Service.

ONCE there was a Bushel and a half of Trouble upset by the untimely Demise of Aunt Hester Harback at the ripe old age of eighty-two. She came of the Harbacks you have heard about. Her Grandfather traded with the Indians and the Noble Red Men have been Paupers ever since.

In the thriving City of Wapahoo, where nearly all of the important Citizens moved in about Day before yesterday, the Harbacks stood out in gleaming Emigenee like a stop-and-go Signal on a frosty Night. They were Coronas entirely surrounded by Stogies. They were American Beauty Roses nodding in Splendor above the lowly Chickweed. They were as near as we can come, with our limited Kit of Tools, to a bona fide Aristocracy.

For many Years before Aune Hester departed, she reigned in solitary Splendor in the Baronial Castle which had been built by her Grandfather, the one who turned the Water into the River and then nailed all the desirable Real Estate. It was made of Brick, very large and cubical, with a high-browed Roof. The old Manse had become prehistoric but it contained a vast Supply of Heirlooms and Treasures—the kind for which Collectors sell their Souls. There was the gilt-framed Paintings of former Harbacks who gloried in Cameo Brooches and Stocks. Some of the Black Walnut had come over the Mountains in Ox-Wagons. The Silver dated back to the Time when Silver was a China Metal. The Crystal and the China were of the Kinds that any good Housekeeper likes to have around the House so that she can refer to them once in a while.

Queens With But a Single Throne.

Aunt Hester had doted on Edward and Jennie, who were the Offspring of her brother, Tom Harback, the one who held the Mint Julep record north of the Ohio River. Soon after his aromatic Remains were planted in Fairview Cemetery the son Edward married Elizabeth Gibbs, whose Pa was a well-known Loan Shark and Reformer. Jennie hooked up with Rodney Derflinger who was due to inherit the Implement Works and had been sand-papered at a College in the East.

Lizzie Gibbs acquired the 18-karat Moniker of Harback and soon after began to feel different, as the Blue Corpuscles coursed madly in her Patrician Veins. Jennie had proved her real Love by assuming the Label of Derflinger but she was still a direct and genuine Lineal Descendant of the Rufus Harback who had double-crossed the Indians and copped the Government Land. She could not forget that she belonged to the only First Family in Town. Also she had great difficulty in forgetting that Ed's Wife, nee Lizzie Gibbs, was the Daughter of a Grocery Clerk who acquired his Pile by nursing Chattel Mortgages and crying whenever he had to cut the Rate to Two Per Cent a Month.

Jennie and Lizzie got along like a couple of Bengals. The Trouble was that the Throne had not been built for Two. The Socially Elect could have but one Queen and she could sport but one Tiara. Jennie and Lizzie each had kidded herself into the Belief that she was that Queen.

On the other Hand, the two Consorts, Ed and Rod, were true and loving Pals. They were trying a Repeat of Damon and Pythias. They didn't give a Hoot for the Family Tree or the Society Column or the Factional Warfares at the Country Club or the Badge of Shame which had to be worn by any one who had not read Foster on Auction Bridge.

After it came out in the Will that Ed was to be Administrator and that the Contents of the Old Home were to be equally divided between Brother and Sister, there wouldn't have been a Kick or an Argument if the Boys had been permitted to make the fifty-fifty Split in their own Way. They would have gone through the Inventory and shaken High Dice for each Item and cleaned up the whole List and no Hard Feelings.

Dividing the Spoils.

Not so with Mrs. Ed and the favorite Niece who, long ago, had spotted the Articles she hankered for and then waited with Christian Resignation, for Aunt Hester to pop off. The very Idea of a Lizzie Gibbs coming in, from the Outside, and swiping any of the Harback Loot was altogether repugnant to Mrs. Derflinger.

So she told Rod to go to Ed and let him know that she wanted the Portraits of Grandpa and Grandma, the old Sideboard, the Sheffield and the Willow-Plate China because Aunt Hester had shown them to her a Thousand times if she had shown them to her Once and just the same as said that some Day or other she wanted Jennie to have all of them.

So Rod went down and sat on the Edge of Ed's large Desk and said, "Well, Old-Timer, slip me the Bad News."

"To begin with," said Ed, "my little Playmates's Idea is to go up to the House and pick out whatever she fancies, and when she gets Her's, your Wife can take away the Leavings. She has her Mind definitely made up in regard to the Ancestors done in Oil, that two-ton Sideboard, all of the English Silver and the Dishes that Aunt Hester always used on State Occasions. She tells me that I am the Heir-Apparent and the only Harback qualified to glorify the Traditions of the Tribe, so it is my Duty to move out Everything except the Curtains and the Sewing Machine."

"What, may I ask, is to be done?"

"It is against the Law to poison our Wives so I think we had better burn down the House."

Jennie was waiting for Rod.

"Did you tell him just what Aunt Hester always expected me to have?" she asked.

"I sure did, Honey," he replied. "I had the Stuff listed and he knows now that we absolutely refuse to stand for any Monkey Business."

"What did he say?"

"He said he'd have another Talk with Elizabeth. Leave everything to me."

As for Mrs. Ed, she was on her High Horse when he came home and tried to sneak upstairs without being spotted.

"I suppose," she said, "that the Derflinger Woman has got it into her Nut that She can go up there and clean out that House, even if you are Administrator and Aunt Hester always wanted you to keep the Family Collections intact."

The Best Way Out.

"Listen, Dearie," said the Typical Husband. "I didn't mince Words. I laid down the Law to Rod and told him to give it straight to Jen. There'll be no Shenanagan with your Uncle Fuller. I'll see that my Sister gets a fair Shake but whatever you think you want you sure will get. Nobody can tell me where to get off or bow to head in. I'm a Tough Egg."

"You tell him that Aunt Hester left Everything in your Hands and you are going to stand on your Rights and have the Say-So," said Elizabeth. "Make it strong, because Rodney is a Weak Character and is absolutely dominated by Jennie, who has a lot of good Qualities but is very, very headstrong."

Came another day and another Conference impended. Mrs. Derflinger was giving Rod the Low Down and Inside on the fearful Crisis.

"I love my Brother," quoth she, "but Candor compels me to say that the Upstart who chloroformed him and carried him to the Altar had got the Indian Sign on him. The poor Fish will do whatever Lizzie orders him to do. She never saw a Butter Knife or a Dessert Spoon until she crashed into our Family and now she wants to go up there and grab a lot of Silver that she wouldn't know how to lay out on the table. You tell him that I get all the Silver and the Family Gallery on the Landing and the Chippendale and the Old Silver and don't forget the Side-Board. She can have Everything in the Laundry. She'll know what to do with a Wringer."

"Depend on me, Kid," said Mr. Derflinger. "I never lost a Battle."

Down at the Office he found Ed painfully working on a Sheet of Foolscap.

"I handled the Old Lady's Affairs for Years," said Edward, "and I know her Writing like a Book. I am now preparing a Codicil dated September 15th, 1922, and witnessed by Mr. Snydacker and Ernest Blootch, both of whom died last Year, bequeathing the Home and Contents to the Colonial Dames, to be used as a Club House."

"Friendship can go no further than that!" exclaimed Rodney Derflinger. "Can you get it through the Probate Court?"

"It's a Cinch. The Judge is one of us."

MORAL: Solomon saved his Reputation by never getting mixed up with a Bunch of Heirs.

Hearty Breakfasts in Days of Samuel Pepys

An insight into the menus of American Colonial days is had in the immortal diary of Samuel Pepys, written 40 years after the Pilgrims had established their colony on the Atlantic coast. Pepys' London table, of course, had a greater variety of food than was available to the Colonists, but their diet was basically the same.

There were no "breakfast foods" in Samuel's time. Fruit juices were not considered as having food value, and were taken on rare occasions as the average person today takes an ice cream soda. Meats constituted not only the piece de resistance but practically the entire meal. He writes: "Breakfast at Mrs. Harper's upon a cold turkey pie and a goose" and "a fine breakfast of bread and butter and sweetmeats and other things with great choice, and strong drinks with which I could not avoyd making my head ake." Shades of food faddists! The name Pepys should be forever synonymous with dyspepsia.—Los Angeles Times.

Moth Lives on Flowers

The hawk-moth, or the hummingbird-moth as it is sometimes called, is peculiarly fitted by nature to draw substance from flowers which, under ordinary circumstances, would be beyond the powers of an insect its size to feed upon. It has a fairly long spindle-shaped body with narrow, strong wings, but the peculiar feature about it is the sucking tube through which it draws its nourishment from the flowers. This tube is often twice the length of the body of the moth and when not in use it is curled up neatly like a watch spring and is carried beneath the head.

It is usually seen along about dusk, and its habit of hovering over plants emitting a humming sound gave it the name of the humming-bird moth.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

The cold is much better this week, thank you, but the ideas are just as scarce.

What is this power we have over people? Or is it just our machinery?

It happens every Thursday, altho not always the same ones do the peeking. Last week it was the telephone gang. They were putting up a pole between Harned's and The Republican building. While one did all the work, the rest of the gang looked in the windows at us.

Lizzie Tish, the front office girl, was seated at a table just two feet away from the window. Three faces pressed close to the glass watched her work the mailing list machine. Then they transferred their attention to me, or was it the newspaper press? Anyway, I was there. On account of a little fog on the panes (Di-di Jim responsible) they couldn't see much on the 45 degree angle, so they changed windows and peered in for another half-hour.

There they are talking and laughing like they never saw a newspaper before—or anybody like me. If they point to me and laugh I'll stop the press and pull down the shades—if we had shades.

Don't telephone gangs ever work? The boss walks up and down in deep thought. He doesn't want to appear too curious, but there—he's stealing a glance. He's caught, he can't leave. I've got his eye now, or is it the press? Now I know how the flapjack artist who stands in the front window of a big city restaurant feels when people stop and gaze in.

There comes the fellow who does all the work, but he is so weighted down with tools, he won't be able to look in. There's no escape. The rest of them are telling him about the attraction on the inside and he's fallen just like the rest. He also takes a peek. A heavy afternoon's work completed. For them.

Whether you rent or buy . . look for electric outlets

Most houses and apartments are wired for electricity but few have wiring enough for adequate electrical service. Adequate wiring is the first requirement of the modern home—without it lamps are poorly placed, table appliances are hard to use, cleaning equipment is difficult to attach.

Visualize each room as you will furnish it, and then figure on extra Electric Outlets for additional equipment. Now is the time to provide for future needs. See your local electrical contractor.

DIET IS IMPORTANT IN BUILDING STRONG TEETH

Resistance Is Increased Against Tooth Decay By Diet

"It has been conclusively shown that diet is an extremely important factor in the building of strong teeth and in increasing their resistance to that destroyer of the teeth—tooth decay," Dr. Richard C. Leonard, Chief of the Divislon of Oral Hygiene, of the Maryland State Department of Health, said recently.

"Because the needs of individuals vary greatly, it is not possible to specify a particular diet that can be regarded as an absolute guarantee of strong teeth and of freedom from decay for each individual, but it is possible to outline a diet that ordinarily will serve this purpose. For dietetic advice to meet individual needs, it is necessary to consult your own doctor or dentist.

"The strength of the teeth is maintained by certain mineral salts—notably calcium and phosphorus, plus the activity of certain vitamins, all of them derived from food we eat. Calcium is to be found in adequate amounts in certain foods, especially in milk, in other dairy products, and in the green, leafy vegetables, such as spinach, lettuce, dandelion greens, etc. Phosphorus is found in many foods, among them, lean beef, liver, chocolate, cocoa, egg yolk, nuts and cheese.

"Vitamins A. C and D all play a part in mouth health, in increasing the resistance to disease and in strengthening the structure of the teeth. Vitamins A and C are found in dairy products, in fresh vegetables sneh as peas, carrots, new cabbage, etc. Vitamin D is found in milk, in cod liver oil, in butter, in whole wheat products and in certain meats. An adequate supply of vitamin D, however, is probably not to be had for the growing child without the administration of eod liver oil. Such administration should always follow specific advice from your own doctor.

"Dental research workers and nutritionists, who have made a special study of diet in relation to the making of strong, healthy teeth and to their protection from decay, have found that from one to two pints of milk per person, some meat (the more milk used, the less meat needed), lettuce, fresh vegetables and fresh fruits —especially oranges and lemons— meet the daily requirements of each individual, as to mineral salts.

"Persons who are suffering from diseases that require special diets, must, of course, consult their own doctors in regard to their specific needs."

The Romance of Rutherford B. Hayes

One of the interesting stories about President Rutherford B. Hayes is the one that his mother selected his bride for him. Whether the story is true or not, the fact remains that the married life of President and Mrs. Hayes was a peculiarly romantic and happy one. In an interesting story of the romance of Rutherford B. Hayes, Mrs. Edna M. Colman says in the current issue of the National Republic:

"Rarely does a doting widowed mother of an idolized only son deliberately select his future wife for him, and still more rarely does the young man so fully agree with his mother's ideas as to fall headlong in love with the girl she choses. Yet all of these unusual elements contributed to the romance of Rutherford Birchard Hayes, young Ohio lawyer, who later became the nineteenth President of the United States, and Lucy Ware Webb, also of Ohio, whom he wooed and married in the most approved lover-like fashion.

"In many ways the romance of these two was unique. Young Hayes was more or less amused at his mother's praises of 'little Lucy Webb, a school girl,' whom she decided should be her son's wife, long before he was thinking of marriage. Although fully aware of her hopes and plans from the start he neither resented nor disapproved of her interest in his affairs. In fact, he teased her about it from time to time in his letters, yet he seems to have fully agreed and accepted her judgment though perhaps his good humored acceptance was his way of taking the whole matter as a joke.

"However, after looking the young lady over quite critically and deliberately, he fell in love with her and set himself to win her from all other suitors. Those who knew the Hayes couple intimately claim that Cupid inoculated both of the young people with a brand of romance that lasted them through life.

"Doubtless much of the attraction between them was because they had so much in common. Both were natives of the Buckeye State, both were strong church people, both patriotic to a marked degree, both devoted to cultured pursuits, country life, outdoor activities, sports, books and music. Each respected and admired the other above all other people and their children revered and adored them and considered them without peers in appearance and achievement.

"When young 'Rddy' Hayes had finished with the schools of Delaware his uncle sent him to a school in Connecticut.

"About this time Mrs. Hayes had become acquainted with Dr. and Mrs. Webb and as the two ladies were both devoted adherents of the cause of temperance they became close friends. Mrs. Hayes very quickly formed such a high opinion of little Lucy Webb, then sixteen that she decided of all the girls she knew, Lucy was of the highest character, the sweetest disposition and altogether the ideal wife for her own cherished only son. This was the highest compliment Mrs. Hayes or any mother could pay to the daughter of her friend and she came to this decision long before either 'Ruddy' or Lucy Webb were aware of her matchmaking plans. She never changed her opinion nor deviated from her first choice of a daughter-in-law.

"The first time Rutherford Hayes saw Lucy Webb was during one of his visits to his home in Delaware, when his mother prevailed upon him to accompany her to a temperance meeting. He was then twenty-five years old, struggling to establish himself as a lawyer in Cincinnati. She was a sixteen year old student. He did not interest the young lady at all, for she forgot all about him, and he was not attracted to her as he described her as a 'bright sunny haired little school girl too young to fall in love.' He did not see her again for three years. Although this is true, it is evident from his diaries and letters that he had not forgotten his mother's hopes and her plans about Lucy Webb as he occasionally mentioned her in his correspondence."

NEW SIGNIFICANCE OF "MADE IN AMERICA."

"Made in America" is taking on a new significance. The movement to buy American made goods is said to be growing by leaps and bounds, especially in the larger cities. When Great Britain adopted "Buy British" as its slogan, it started something that has set Americans to thinking, and their thought is that if it is a good thing for Britons to patronize British industry, it may not be a bad thing for Americans to patronize American industry.

It is being rapidly discovered, too, that some of the foreign goods that are flooding our shores are just as cheap in quality as they are in price. Japanese electric light bulbs are notable among such articles. Tests of these bulbs indicate that 100 hours is a long life for some of them, and that they burn from 25 to 50 per cent more "juice" than American bulbs of similar wattage consume, so they are expensive even at the low prices for which they sell.

Several of America's important corporations with 600,000 on their payrolls have joined a cooperative movement to buy only American goods when these are available in competition with foreign goods. The effort is to be made in the interest of giving jobs to jobless Americans.

An educational committee to teach the public the value of buying American goods only when these are available, is to be named, but there should not be any great need of education upon this subject. It should be evident to anybody that if he buys, say a chair that is made in Germany, he has given employment to a German instead of to an American chair worker; that if he buys a German made chair, most of the money he pays for it will go to Germany, but if he buys an American made chair all the money he pays for it will remain in America.

Americans often have been allured by the statement of a store clerk in response to an objection to the high price of some article. "But this is imported." The word "imported" carries a certain amount of "class" with it to one class of Americans. But these are being gradually educated to the need of buying American goods if we are to protect our own markets, our own manufacturers, our own jobs, even. That does not mean to boycott foreign-made goods that are not or cannot be produced in the United States. You cannot demand an American-mined diamond, nor American-grown coffee and tea, of course, nor American silk. But we can and should demand American steel, American toys, American woolens, American hats and cravats and American foods whenever these are obtainable.

U. S. RAILROADS ARE LOSING $200,000,000 A YEAR

Running into the red $200,000,000 a year, the railroads of the country are asking the Interstate Commerce Commission for authority to continue the temporary surcharge on freight bills. They became effective last January and will expire automatically next March. In nine months the surcharges have realized on $52,000,000 of the $125,000,000 it was estimated a year ago they would produce. The lines desire also to abandon the pooling arrangements in order that each carrier may retain receipts from its own collections.

Failure of the surcharges to overcome deficits suggests that higher rates alone will not solve the railroad problem. In fact, increased rates have a tendency to drive business to competitors. On the other hand, where traffic density warrants, lower rates may greatly expand the volume of commerce. Local roads seem to have profited from the passenger business stimulated by the special excursion offers. What the corporations have to recover is more than the loss due to causes arising from the depression; they must combat also the trend of adverse circumstances which set against them when the automobile became a serious rival.

Meantime their taxes mount. One expert testified that various kinds of Government levies took forty cents of every dollar the railroads collected during the year. Without knowing how the taxes are distributed, one must admit the figure is outrageous. Of course, the Interstate Commerce Commission can do nothing about this particular problem; nor can the Federal Government do much about it without cooperation from the local jurisdictions. But if a remedy for the railroads' plight were sought in tax reductions, the continuance of increased freight rates might possibly be avoided.

Lloyd L. Shaffer, Clerk of the Circuit Court of Allegany County, Does Not Agree With the Passing of Proposed Laws Governing the Marriage of Out-of-State Couples Who Come To Maryland To Be Married.

To the Editor of The Republican.

In your paper of December 15th, I notice an article entitled, "Blame State and Church for Acts of Bluebeard," which brings forth this letter to you.

Reverend Brock and Reverend Hodge seem to think the fault of "this man Bluebeard" can be attributed to the State, the church and the different Clerks of the Circuit Court, but I can not see for the life of me why they give us the credit for the crime committed by the aforesaid "Bluebeard" or anyone like him.

It has always been the custom of this office to try in every way to cooperate with the Ministerial Association and the Legislature of the State of Maryland, and I really believe if these reverend gentlemen would take the time to go to any clerk's office in the State and see how licenses are issued, then follow it up to the time the ceremony has been performed and recorded, they would have a different slant on the operation.

I, and I think all the other clerks of the State, are against any legislation in reference to a time whereby a couple must remain in town after having once secured a license before getting married, because in my mind it would create a condition of common debauchery and lewdness that would be hard to overcome.

We always put a couple under oath and ask the usual questions. Where we have any doubt about their age, we go so far as to ask them when they were born and check up on the dates. If within the law of 21 for the man and 18 for the girl we issue the license. If divorced in some out of State court we ask to see a copy of the divorce decree and other questions prescribed by the laws of the State of Maryland.

So far as hygienics, there is no law in the State of Maryland covering this question (although we might have our own private opinion).

And so far as the self-styled "friends and advisers," they have no place in our office. Of course if a taxicab man comes into our office, that is his business, as he is licensed to do so by the laws of our State and community, but not allowed to solicit business.

Several years ago we had an organization of Clerks of Court and tried for some laws governing these very conditions spoken of in this letter and really accomplished something, as best we could, for all parties concerned.

One good thing I might suggest to the ministers, if there was a law passed whereby they would have to register in the Clerk's office the same as a doctor or a lawyer desiring to practice, it would go a long way toward eliminating the marriage of unsuspecting couples by these so-called "preachers" or "elders" or "missionaries" of some unauthorized and illegal organization to which they claim to hold allegiance and upon which these ceremonies are performed.

I hope, Mr. Editor, you will publish this letter soon and send a marked copy of your very good paper to several leading papers throughout the State.

Very truly yours,
LLOYD L. SHAFFER, Clerk,
Circuit Court Allegany County.
Cumberland, Md., Jan. 6, 1933.

WOULD RALLY TAXPAYERS TO BACK TAX PROGRAM

that the bill would mean a substantial saving to the counties in court costs.

Under the proposed law persons convicted of larceny of goods valued under $25 would be sentenced to not less than eighteen months in the county jail or House of Correction or fined not more than $50 or both.

The convicted person would still have the right of trial by jury by appealing the case to the Circuit Court. By this method, it was explained, the grand jury would not consider the case. Some opposition was voiced to the bill, but the objections were withdrawn.

To Decide Apportionment

The bill which would allow counties to receive 1 cent of the original 2-cent gasoline tax was read in part, but the schedule of apportionment to the counties and Baltimore city had not been worked out. It is proposed to give thirty per cent to Baltimore City, while the other seventy per cent would go to the county commissioners for their general road and bridge work.

The schedule of division, to be drawn up under the direction of Mr. McSherry, will take into consideration the road mileage in each county and the value of the assessable property.

To Ask Share In Fines

The fourth bill, which would allow counties to share in fines collected for violation of State automobile laws, has not been drafted, but will be ready for approval before the third week of the session of the Legislature, it was said.

County Commissioner George D. Browning, of Garrett, called the attention of the assembled commissioners to the fact that under the present law counties are compelled to pay into the State treasury the full amount of money levied for State purposes and not the amount collected by the tax authorities. In some cases counties are thus compelled to pay from a few hundred dollars to more than $10,000 more than they receive because the State tax commission does not permit the counties to take into consideration the insolvencies which occurring year after year and deduct the amounts from the State fund.

Before adjourning the meeting former State Senator J. H. C. Legg, of Queen Anne's county, urged the delegates to gain the backing of their taxpayers.

Pleads for Support

"The State Roads Commission can't send delegates to this ancient city. We taxpayers do that. They can't call it State money when it belongs to us taxpayers. Therefore, tell your delegates and Senators that you as voters in your counties want these bills passed, and if we stand united we'll win. We have got to cut expenses down. The people must be relieved, and not by 7 cents either."

Mr. Legg referred to the Governor's proposal that the minimum levy for counties before sharing in the school equalization fund should be 60 cents instead of 67 cents.

"We don't want new means of raising money through taxation," he concluded, "we must cut down the expenses we already have."

To Observe Prison Aid Sunday

Prison Aid Sunday is to be observed by the ministers of the Mountain Top Ministers' Association on Sunday, January 15.

The purpose of these services is to acquaint the church-going people more intimately with the problems relating to the administration of penal and correctal institutions and the crime conditions generally, thereby developing a better public understanding of these problems and a more general demand for their treatment.

Prison Aid Sunday is sponsored annually by the American Prison Aid Association, which has an organization in every state of the Union.

"Public interest is alive today on the subject of law breaking," Rev. C. A. Shilke said. "There is a demand for the severity of treatment of the law breaker; however the treatment of the prisoner is not a matter of mere punishment but a matter of reform that must be worked out in the prisons."

COBLENTZ TO BE ASKED BY HIS PARTY TO QUIT SENATE

tee and of the Committee on Revaluation and Assessments.

In the opinion of his colleagues from the counties adjacent to Frederick, and also of Governor Ritchie, it was understood, Senator Coblentz's presence at the sessions of the Senate this and last week have been a source of embarrassment to the administration and the Democratic party. It had been expected that, if he did not resign, he would remain away from Annapolis until the disposal of the legal proceedings against him, according to some of the members of the Senate.

Member Of State Board

Senator Coblentz also is a member of the State Board of Education, but it is understood that Governor Ritchie views his occupation of this position in a different light than his partieipation in the functions of a law-making body and is disposed to await the outcome of the Court of Appeals' review of the conviction against the Frederick countian.

Senator Coblentz, formerly the chairman of the State Board of Welfare, was elected to the Senate in 1930. For a number of years he had been one of the Democratic leaders of Frederick county and Western Maryland and years ago served a term as a member of the House of Delegates.

The information that the formal move to oust him was being planned was obtained at the close of today's session of the Assembly, which again was devoted mainly to organization.

House Is Organized

In the House committee assignments were announced by T. Barton Harrington, Speaker, and the report of the organization committee on the allotment of patronage was adopted after a slight flurry.

Among the committee assignments was the appointment of Delegate O. S. Fike to the Committee on Railroads and Canals—his lone committee. But even with this lone assignment of the Garrett countian to a post he beat Delegate Cullers, also of Garrett county, who was left without assignment on a single committee—probably the only member of the House thus treated by the speaker.

Only one bill—a measure to create a metropolitan sewerage district in and around the city of Annapolis, sponsored by Senator Ridgely P. Melvin, of Anne Arundel county, was introduced in the Senate.

Speaker Harrington's committee assignments contained few surprises. Delegate James J. Lindsay, Jr., of Baltimore county, again was named chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and Democratic floor leader, the post that goes with it. Delegate George Hofferbert, of the First Baltimore district, was renamed, as had been assumed, chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Woman Given Post

For the first time in the history of the General Assembly a woman, Miss M. Lavina Engle, of Montgomery county, was placed on the Ways and Means Committee. She also is chairman of the Committee on Civil Service Reform.

Prior to the announcement of the committees, the House approved a motion to permit the Speaker to increase the membership of the Judiciary Committee from eighteen to twenty, and the Ways and Means Committee from eighteen to nineteen. In making his assignments public, the Speaker said the only changes made were "made to strengthen the committees."

The only hindrance to the adoption of the organization committee's recommendation on patronage, which was brought before the House as a special order of business, came from two Republican Delegates from Washington county—E. W. Miller and George D. Hicks.

They attempted to amend the report by striking out a paragraph which permits the Speaker to make such "supplemental appointments" as are deemed necessary to the list of employes, and when this failed, they endeavored to have the employes' list limited to "the number of positions provided in the budget" for the current session.

Both Amendments Fail

Both failed on a viva voce vote, with the two Delegates on their feet asking for a roll call. When the time came from the vote for ratification of the report as originally submitted, the question then was placed on a purely party basis by Delegate Lindsay whether the report had not been drafted by a committee composed of majority members of the House.

The House again saved $4 by appointing Delegate Jonathan Sleeman, of Allegany county, to open the session with prayer, rather than having this done by a clergyman, and, concurring with the Senate, adjourned until 8 P. M. next Tuesday.

Anonymous Communications

Communications in the form of local letters, local items, and some times news stories continue to come to this office unsigned. It has always been a rule of any progressive newspaper office never to print any letters that are not signed by the writer.

Signing one's name to an article does not mean that it will be published, but it shows good faith on the part of the sender and gives The Republican the source of the material.

Anyone expecting to have articles published in The Republican must sign his name to the articles sent in. Just this week a local letter and several other articles were dropped into the wastebasket because there were no signatures appended to the communications.

FIRE COMPANY RESPONDS TO 24 FIRES DURING 1932

No Serious Fire Occurs in Oakland During Year—Many Farmhouses Are Burned

SOME ARE INCENDIARY

Twenty-four fire alarms in Oakland, Mt. Lake Park and vicinity were answered during the past year by the Oakland Volunteer Fire department, resulting in small losses except in calls from out-of-town where the blazes had gained too much headway before the department was notified, or where sufficient water supply was lacking, according to the files of The Republican.

Many farm dwellings and barns were destroyed by fire during the year, a goodly number supposed to be of incendiary origin, while quite a few of the alarms in Oakland were caused by fire from the same cause. In some instances where the department was called, lack of sufficient water kept the firemen from saving the buildings.

A serious accident occurred on February 17. Robert L. Wolfe was seriously injured as the department was answering a call to Loch Lynn, when the truck overturned near the East End Service station. Mt. Lake sought aid six times, Deer Park twice, farm residents six times, and only seven fires occurred in Oakland. No calls came from Crellin during 1932.

The calls answered by the local department included the following:

Home of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Comerford, Mt. Lake, January 8, flue, no damage.

Home of W. S. Friend, Pleasant Valley, January 31, flue, no damage.

Home of E. C. Frame, Mt. Lake, January 31, flue, no damage.

Postoffice at Deer Park, February 2, flue, no damage.

Home of Vernon Connor, near Loch Lynn, February 17, entirely destroyed.

Home of Mrs. Clark DeBerry, north of Oakland, February 23, entirely destroyed, lack of water.

Home of Mrs. G. W. L. Lohm, November 29, explosion, little damage.

Machine shed of Dice Spiker, near Oakland, December 7, destroyed.

Held That Town Cannot Prevent Erection Of Building

In the opinion of City Attorney W. W. Dawson, voiced at a special meeting of the Mayor and Town Council held last night there is no legal reason why the permit as granted to Francis E. Gonder to erect a store building on his property adjacent to the Lutheran church should not stand.

The decision followed a hearing before the City Council last night on the legality of granting such a permit. Members of the Lutheran church and other townspeople protested against the erection of a one-story building between the Gonder residence and the church, the proposed structure to be 12 feet wide and 60 feet long, and a protest was lodged with the council setting forth that such a structure would add to the fire hazard and not be in keeping with surroundings in that section of the town. Mr. Gonder had been granted a building permit at the January meeting of the town's governing body.

At Boston, a professor at Harvard, was committed to jail on a charge by German consular authorities of being a former German banker of Berlin, alleged to have fradulently obtained more than 3 million marks, or about $750,000.

Only two Friday the Thirteenths During 1933

Only twice this year will the superstitious have to beware about Friday, the thirteenth, but they won't have much time to prepare for the first one, which comes tomorrow.

The only other time this year when such a date occurs is in October.

Returned to Training School

Stanley Schlossnagle, 17, of near Accident, who has been in the Maryland Training School for Boys, and who violated his parole, was recommitted to that institution on Tuesday.

Schlossnagle was let out to do some work, and the reports of his employers were very unsatisfactory, according to State's Attorney, W. W. Dawson. He then returned to his home near Accident and created such a disturbance that Sheriff Haenftling was called. Schlossnagle was taken back to the Training School by Col. James A. Pratt, superintendent, who happened to be in Garrett county on Monday and Tuesday on a general inspection tour.

Boy Scouts Receive Charter For Ninth Consecutive Year

A charter to further conduct a troop of Boy Scouts in Oakland for the ninth consecutive year, was received during the past week and will be presented to the troop at the anniversary week celebration in February, the scoutmaster announced.

The troop was formed in 1924 by Rev. A. J. Torrey, who acted as the scoutmaster for a year. He was followed by Scott W. Shirer, Rev. Paul G. Linaweaver and the present scoutmaster, George H. Hanst.

Troop committeemen named in the charter are Walter W. Dawson, chairman; Donald R. Sincell, Harland L. Jones and Franklin E. Rathbun. Geo. Hanst is re-commissioned scoutmaster and Bernard Gonder, Jr., is named as assistant scoutmaster.

Win President's Prize

In a letter from Frank B. Gale, Scout Executive, Cumberland, he states that Oakland troop was one of 50 percent of the troops in the council to win the President's award for achievement for 1932, and for which he has made application.

It is planned to present this award also during the anniversary week celebration in February. To win an award a troop had to be duly registered and in good standing, familiar with the ten year program of bringing one out of every four boys in the country into scouting, to reman for at least four years, a satisfactory schedule of meetings with reasonable progress in achievement and a duly registered membership on December 31, 1932, in excess of its registered membership on December 31, 1931. The award is a streamer or a metal emblem suitable for attachment to the troop flagstaff.

Guy William Hinebaugh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Hinebaugh, and Jack Hinebaugh, son of Mr. and Mrs. Elwood Hinebaugh, passed all their Tenderfoot requirements and will be enrolled in the troop. Darwin DeWitt, Jack Lawton and Walter Stevens attended meetings for the first time on Friday and began passing their Tenderfoot tests. Donald Helbig and Ervin Smith will soon havo their Tenderfoot requirements completed.

Ancient Libraries

Although the ancient libraries had parchment rolls instead of books they resembled modern ones in many ways. At Timgad, in Roman Africa, was a delightful public library which was the gift of a benevolent citizen, and it was furnished as one might be today, with tables and comfortable chairs where the reader could sit at ease to consult the work he had borrowed.

Rib of Contention

One of those scientific prowlers who are always digging up strange and interesting things informs us that according to Brazilian Indians the first humans were not Adam and Eve, but two women, and that the first quarrel came about when each claimed to be the oldest. Either the Brazilian tradition is in error or women have changed a lot since that time.—Exchange.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

Already there are evidences that the political peace which descended upon the country after the election in November is about to be dispelled. That it was anything more than an armed truce, was of course not to have been expectd. Now that the echoes of the French debt disagreement have begun to die away, leaders in Congress are beginning to do a little arms brandishing on domestic issues with the evident purpose of reaping whatever political advantage there is to be reaped.

Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, Democratic leader in the present Senate, opened the attack the other day by inferring that the Republicans were already using obstructive tactics with the evident purpose of forcing an extra session of the new Congress which comes into being with the new administration on March 4. The Senator even went so far as to express the fear that President Hoover himself might veto some of the legislation to be passed by the present Congress for the purpose of forcing an extra session and interfering with the Rooseveltian program.

Republican leaders were not long in coming back at the gentleman from Arkansas. Representative Snell, the Republican leader in the House, charged in very unkindly fashion that the Democrats in the present Congress have no program and have never had any except that which was encompassed in the slogan "beer by Christmas, "Congressman Treadway of Massachusetts, was even more specific when he said:

"The Democratic party controls the House and with its coalition vote also controls the Senate. In what way, therefore, can it be said that the Republican party is today defeating legislation? Since the night of November 8 it has been known that the next administration will be Democratic. Has any announcement come either through the President-elect or the Democratic leaders of Congress of any fixed program which that party has in prospect?

"President Hoover has shown his good offices in endeavoring to cooperate with President-elect Roosevelt in the question of international debts but his efforts toward cooperation have been declined. The Democratic leaders of the Senate have announced that under no circumstances will any nominations of the present administration be confirmed. This attitude has cost the government the expert services of such a man as Charles R. Crisp, of Georgia, on the U. S. Tariff Commission and undoubtedly other non-partisan appointments. The enormous Democratic political appetite for everything possible from elevator boys at the Capitol to international arbiters makes for crippling the efficiency of the government and continued delay."

And so it will continue to go from now on. There will of course be a decided change in strategy when the new administration comes in. The Democrats will then for the first time in twelve years be on the defensive. Their unprecedented victory has given them entire control of the government. The mantle of responsibility has been taken from the shoulders of the Republicans and placed squarely upon the shoulders of the Democrats.

During the past twelve years it has been the pleasure, if not the duty, of the Democrats to attack, to plague the Republican majority in every way possible. The Republicans with an administration to defend, and with the respsonsibility of putting through platform measures, have been under a serious handicap, when it came to the matter of handing out political barbed shafts and keen and cutting criticism. A great many Republican partisans have complained that during the past few years the Republican leaders have not been aggressive in attack. But now that the situation has changed completely and the Republicans have little to do except to go out with their freshly sharpened harpoons the situation is going to be reversed, and the Democrats will occupy the uncomfortable seats.

This is the way it always turns out in the arena of American politics. Political students who do not think the Republicans can or will take advantage of the opportunity to be offered them in the coming months have evidently forgotten the closing months of the Wilson administration and the tremendous Republican fight made against the League of Nations, the treaty of Versailles and government control of railroads and other great utilities. The Republicans could do this because they were in the minority. They are again in the minority.

BETHEL

Funeral services for Keith Paugh, 11-year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Urner Paugh, of near Barnum, were held Friday afternoon, with interment in the Tasker cemetery, near Cross, W. Va. The services were in charge of Rev. Gillium, of Elk Garden, assisted by the Methodist choir. The palibearers were Vincent Spoerlein, Virgil Kitzmiller, Percy Bray and James Ferris, and the flower carriers were James Virtz, John Davis, Darrell Bray, William Virtz and Oliver Aronhalt.

Besides his parents the child is survived by two sisters and five brothers. He was a pupil in the Bethel school.

Miss Elizabeth Workman has resumed her duties as teacher in Bethel school after being confined to her home in Frostburg with an attack of influenza. Miss Katheleen Baer, of Finzel, was the substitute teacher during Miss Workman's absence.

Adam Grant's Daughter

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

OLD Adam Grant, editor and proprietor of one of the great western newspapers, never wanted it said of him that he gave preference to any member of his own family—in the matter of positions on his staff.

That was why his lovely daughter, Eve, found herself established in a small flat in New York, surrounded by and observing the contents of a hundred and one magazines. Laboriously and very intelligently she was studying the world of fiction from the magazine standpoint.

"When you've mastered the analytical sense and can express it in words that convey your meaning to the readers of my paper—then and then only can you have a position on my "staff," Old Adam had told Eve. "If you stay at home here among your friends you won't get anywhere. Hop off to New York for a year and pack that pretty head of yours with first-hand knowledge."

Aunt Clem, her mother's sister, had came along with her to see that she ate three square meals a day.

It was Aunt Clem who, bored at times into reading the personals in the papers, came across the advertisement that gave her an idea.

It read, "Old magazines wanted by writer." And there was a name attached which made Aunt Clem smile secretly.

Aunt Clem sighed in relief. The small flat was becoming like a storage room for magazines.

She consequently answered the advertisement and left a huge bundle of magazines to be called for.

Not by the proverbial candle, but beside a well-lighted table, young Avery Weldon carried on his as yet embryonic authorship. But he was working desperately hard to succeed and was reading fiction in the magazines vorneiously in order to get a drift with the market.

That was how the huge pile of old magazines happened to be on the floor beside him. He couldn't quite afford to buy all the new ones and his advertisement had brought him many.

"By jove! This is funny!"

Beside the title of the stories were fine marginal notes of criticism, couched in terse but most expressive language.

"Medium. Not bad. Piffle. No point. Wishy-Washy. Very good. Why was it given space? Doesn't know men. Needs to study women."

Avery swiftly picked up the publications that had printed his own work and with a somewhat shrinking heart opened the page. Yes, there beside his own story which he had in a moment of stupidity called "A Rose of the Desert" he saw the words, "Author in the making but sadly lacking the human touch."

Avery puffed a bit furiously at his pipe. The nail was hit straight on the head. Avery knew that.

And because a real author must not be strictly conventional or too awfully bound by laws of society, Avery got up, put on his hat and strolled toward the apartment building from whence his magazines had arrived.

The elevator took him up to the fifth floor and there left him. And in another few moments he was standing at an opened door. Aunt Clem herself was out, but Eve answered his ring.

Avery didn't know what to say now that he was there and with Eve's calm eyes gazing at him he felt that he made rather a sorry story of the incident of buying the old magazines.

But Eve was very nice about it and invited him in.

"I didn't even know my aunt had cleared them out," she said, as he followed her into a magazine-strewn room.

"I wanted so desperately to chat with the critic who had jotted those remarks down that I chanced coming here," he said, boyishly. "My dad has given me a year to make good in story writing, bless him," he went on, seeing the kindling interest in Eve's eyes, "and I believe if you'd be so good as to help me, with criticism, I could win out."

"I know you could," was Eve's unexpected answer. "I see it somewhere in the deep places of your stories—I would love to help you."

She told him then about her own dad and who he was and all about home and Avery laughed. Then he pulled a frayed letter from his pockets—a letter written some six months before, and handed it to her.

"Avery, my boy," it ran, "while you're messing about with your writing, just take time to look up Old Adam Grant's daughter. She's gone to New York to make good, too. Fine girl, too, from what her dad says, but then, perhaps I say the same to Grant, about my boy—" Eve read no further until she had cast accusing eyes at Avery.

"I like that! Six whole months and you've never even taken the trouble—"

"And darn glad I am, too," said Avery. "If I knew you all this time, I doubt if a single story would have left the typewriter—I should have been bumped into a dream so glorious I—oh, I say, Eve, when do we go back home—I'm longing for the time when I can get down to hard work and make use of all this study to do the big work that only you can help me with."

Aunt Clem came in and smiled—she knew a thing or two.

MT. LAKE PARK

Among the many new gadgets exhibited at the New York automobile show is a special lock for the gas tank cap. It would appear that such a safety device is badly needed in and about the Park. The other evening the garage in which Mrs. Frank Murphy keeps her car was broken into and the gasoline in her car drained out and carried away. To enter the building the thieves were compelled to pry off a padlock.

Another car had all the oil drained and tho absence of the lubricant was not noted until the car had been driven from the Park to Oakland. Had an inexperienced man been at the wheel the lack of oil might not have been noticed and serious damage to the machine resulted.

It may be said by some that this is only petty thievery. But the fact that a securely locked building was broken open and entered places the crime in the category of a felony and the penalty on conviction is rather severe. Many other instances have occurred, of a similar nature.

The poultry flock of Britten Martin has for the third time been blood tested with gratifying results. Out of the entire flock less than two per cent failed to pass the inspection. Of this small number only one was a reactor and two suspicious.

In looking over a list of certified breeders, issued by the Maryland State Poultry Association, which operates in conjunction with the Agriculture Department at College Park, we find that Mr. Martin is the only breeder in Garrett county certified and the only member of the Association in this county who is legally privileged to attach the Association's certified blood tested certificate to the shipments of poultry.

This is not a free advertising boost, but we believe that any outstanding enterprise in the county should receive favorable mention in the county press. As a result of Mr. Martin's enterprise and attention, he has sent birds to a number of States in this country and abroad.

A program is being worked out for the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the institution of the M. E. church of the Park. There are a number of historical and interesting items in connection with this proposed celebration, which will be held the last of the present month, which we hope to include in this column next week.

A letter to Mr. J. A. Enlow from Mr. C. J. Otto, of New Germany, congratulating him upon his fifty-ninth wedding anniversary, of which he learend from an item appearing in this column, shows that county correspondence is widely read. Mr. Enlow and Mr. Otto were long associated in Sunday school work. Mr. Otto has passed his eighty-fourth milestone and is now serving his fifty-ninth years as a Sunday school superintendent of the New Germany Reformed church.

THE TARGUMS

The word "Targum" is of Chaldean ancestry, and means interpretation. The Targum was one of the ancient translations or paraphrases of portions of the Old Testament in the Chaldee language or dialect. It is also a general term for the Aramaic version of the Old Testament, which became necessary when, after and even during the Babylonian exile, Hebrew began to die out as the popular language, and was supplanted by Chaldee, an idiom, or rather a family of idioms belonging to the Semitic group.

The origin of the Targum itself is shrouded in mystery. The first signs of it—as an already fixed institution, have been found by some in the book of Nehemiah, and according to tradition, Ezra and his colaborators were its original founders. There can be little doubt that the first translations into Chaldee belong to a comparatively early period.

We have seen in America how quickly the descendants of immigrants lose their mother tongue and adopt not only our English but our American slang. A living language is constantly changing, and its words undergo an evolution in meaning which requires a new lexicography every few decades. It may be readily seen therefore that the captive Jews subjected to the onslaughts of a foreign language for seventy years, lost, as a race, their familiarity with the Hebrew tongue, so that for their instruction the Holy Scriptures must be translated into the vernacular of Babylon.

Nevertheless, the learned class, represented by the Lintes who were also priests or rabbis, kept alive the knowledge of Hebrew in its classic form. These interpreters were known asmeturgemens, who formed themselves into a certain guild, as professional followers of the learned men who, at a previous period, had volunteered their services in translation and paraphrastic interpretation of the sacred writings.

At first, and probably for many centuries, the Targum was not committed to writing, for the same reason that the "Oral Law" itself was not at first intended to become fixed as a code for all times. In the course of time, however, both had to yield to circumstances and their being written down was considered preferable to their being utterly forgotten, of which there was danger. Yet a small portion only of the immense mass of oral Targums that must have been produced has survived.

Our next article will continue the story of the Targums.

Apples In Many Ways

Butterscotch Apples

Use 5 apples, 2-3 cup brown sugar, ¾ cup cornstarch, ⅛ teaspoon salt, ½ to 1 tablespoon butter, and ½ teaspoon vanilla. Wash apples, remove core, place in dish, sprinkle with sugar, add water to cook, cover, bake in moderate oven until tender. Serve with sauce made as follows: Mix cornstarch and sugar together and cook in hot milk, adding a little of the apple syrup. Boil for a few minutes, add salt, butter and vanilla, stirring together. Pour this sauce over the apples. These may be served hot or cold.

Quick Apple Pudding

Use 3 sour apples, ¼ lemon, 1 tablespoon butter, 2 eggs, ⅓ cup sugar, spice. Peel and grate the apples. Add the juice, grated rind of lemon, the well-beaten egg yolk and butter creamed with the sugar. Season with a little cinnamon or nutmeg, fold in stiffly beaten whites of the eggs. Pour into buttered dish. Cook in moderate oven 25 to 30 minutes. Serve cold with cream.

Apple Tapioca

Use 6 tablespoons pearl tapioca, 1¼ cups cold water, 1 cup boiling water, 5 sour apples, ¾ cup sugar, and ⅛ teaspoon salt. Soak the tapioca in cold water an hour or more, and drain and add boiling water and salt. Core and pare the apples and place them in buttered dish. Spread with sugar, then tapioca. Bake in moderate oven 30 to 40 minutes. Serve with cream or custard sauce.

Apple Whip

To 1 cup apple pulp add 4 tablespoons sugar and 1 teaspoon lemon juice. Fold into this mixture the stiffly beaten whites of 2 eggs. Chill and serve with custard sauce or bake in moderate oven 20 to 25 minutes until firm.

Farm Layouts That Prove Best

That there is a direct relationship between layout and labor income on the farm is shown in a survey made by the University of Maryland Experiment Station. This survey found that of 127 Maryland farms studied in 1929 those with good layouts had an avcrage labor income of $1,753 as compared with $133 for those with poor layouts. One year later, in 1930, and the year of the great drought, farms that had good layouts showed a labor income of $294, while those with poor layouts lost an average of $338.

This materlal and much more, gathered by A. B. Hamilton and Dr. S. H. DeVault of the Experiment Station, has been published in bulletin form and may be had by anyone for the asking. The bulletin is called "Economic Efficiency of the Farm Layout in Maryland," and the number is 338.

Artificial Compost Heap

A good economic measure these days and one which will prove highly practical to the small gardener as well as the farmer is a compost heap for making artificial manure for the home garden. Such a heap may be started at any time of the year and may be built on the surface of the soil although it is better to dig two pits one or two feet in depth and four by four feet square so that one may be filled while the other is decomposing.

According to F. W. Oldenburg, agronomist for the University of Maryland Extension Service, any organic matter, such as lawn clippings, leaves, weeds, waste vegetable parts, kitchen scraps or old straw and hay may be used to make compost. If not enough of the above material is available a bale of peat moss may be used to advantage to make up the deficiency.

The compost heap should be built up evenly and when it has reached a depth of at least a foot, lime at the rate of three or four pounds should be sprinkled over it, one inch of good top soil put on this and four or five pounds of complete fertilizer sprinkled on the soil. Then the process is repeated, first starting with another layer of compost until four or five such layers have been laid. When the heap has reached a thickness of about three feet, it should be evened off, leaving a flat top that will catch all rain possible and then left to decompose for several weeks or two months, depending upon the weather and time of year. During the time of decomposing the heap should be forked over well several times every two or three weeks until the coarse material is broken down. Keeping the heap moist and compact will hasten the process.

Mr. Oldenburg points out that the pit should be located in some secluded place and will work better if lined with cement He also states that hydrated lime and pulverized limestone will be found the most convenient form of lime to put on the compost and a complete fertilizer rich in nitrogen, such as 7-6-5, is about the best kind of fertilizer.

Maryland Motorists Pay 42% of State's Entire Tax Revenue

Motorists of Maryland contributed over 42 per cent of the State's entire tax revenue during the last fiscal year, according to Peyton S. Cochran, chairman of the Maryland-District of Columbia Petroleum Industries Committee. This committee assists the State in its complete collection of the gasoline tax, the source of 31.3 per cent of the revenue in itself. This is the largest individual source of tax monies for the State.

Motorists pay four cents per gallon on their gasoline, an additional one cent per gallon federal gasoline tax, registration fees, title fees, driver license fees and personal property taxes.

The State gasoline tax supplied 31.3 per cent of the revenue, registration fees 11.1 per cent and drivers' licenses, title fees and duplicates 1.8 per cent. In addition to this the State levies a 25 cent per $100 valuation personal property tax on the assessed valuation of the vehicle.

"Of the $25,540,006.22 received by this State in taxes, the motorist contributed in gasoline taxes alone $8,005,847.78, or more than was received from any other single levy. Then he paid $2,837,847.57 in registration fees, $125,804.50 in title fees, $250,106.00 in drivers' license fees, and $75,817.38 for duplicates of plates and registrations. The motorists add to this thousands of dollars paid in personal property taxes and thousands more paid to the Federal government in gasoline and lubricating oil taxes.

THE REPUBLICAN

VOLUME 56. OAKLAND, GARRETT COUNTY, MARYLAND, JANUARY 19, 1933. NUMBER 49.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION IS APPROVED BY TAX PAYERS

Resolutions Adopted at Meeting Saturday Calling On Legislators To Support Measures

WOULD REDUCE LEVY 50C.

Asserting that if the proposed legislation of the County Commissioners' Association, which has for its purpose the reduction of the tax burden, was enacted into law, the tax rate of Garrett county would be reduced fifty or more cents, Garrett county members of the General Assembly were asked to give their best efforts in support of the bills, at a meeting of about two hundred taxpayers in the Court House in Oakland last Saturday morning, the meeting being presided over by Charles W. Ream, of Crellin, who was selected after he had been named for the post by County Commissioner J. W. Harvey. Henry M. Speicher, of Accident, was the secretary of the meeting. George D. Browning, of the Commissioners' board explained the proposed measures as they were presented in the resolutions adopted by the meeting.

The resolutions adopted as they were presented, read as follows:

The Resolutions

WHEREAS, The County Commissioners' Association of the State of Maryland, in meeting assembled, at the City of Annapolis, on a recent date, unanimously adopted a program which it is proposed to submit to the Maryland Legislature for the purpose of having the same encated into laws and which has for its object the reduction of the heavy burden of taxes now exacted from the taxpayers of the various counties of the State, and which said bills briefly are as follows:

(a) To reduce the minimum amount of the money to be raised by the several counties of the State in order to participate in the State fund from 67 cents on the $100.00 to 40 cents

(b) To apportion a certain amount of the gasoline tax to the County Commissioners of the several counties to be used in maintaining the roads of the counties outside of State roads.

(c) To enact proper legislation so as to permit cases of larceny involving $25.00 or less before Justices of the Peace and reduce the same from the crime of felony to misdemeanors.

AND WHEREAS, If said proposed bills are to become laws of this State and the taxpayers have the benefit thereof in the reduction of their taxes, it is necessary that said bills have the active and loyal support of our representatives in the Legislature; therefore be it

RESOLVED, That we, the taxpayers of Garrett county, in meeting assembled, this 14th day of January, 1933, do earnestly urge each of our respective representatives in the Legislature to give their best efforts in support of said bills that the same may become laws, and the taxpayers of this county may have some relief from the tax burden under which they have been laboring.

C. W. REAM, Chairman.
HENRY M. SPEICHER, Secretary.

The amount of the gasoline tax to be apportioned to the commissioners under the proposed law was understood to be one cent of the 2-cent tax, and the taxpayers were firm in their desire to have the county commissioners retain control of the county roads instead of putting the State in charge of these highways, as suggested by Governor Ritchie in his message to the Legislature.

Should the proposed legislation be enacted into law the 1933 county levy would in all probability be around $1.00 or $1.10 on the $100 valuation of property, it was stated. The levy for schools would be cut 37 cents and the gas tax would bring a three-cent reduction in road upkeep.

Seven More Names Added to Red Cross Roll Call

Seven more names were added to the Red Cross Roll Call this week, Mrs. Samuel Cole, county chairman, has announced. This brings the total amount of money received to $285.22 during the present campaign.

A Peculiar Find in Abandoned Coal Mine

Henry Barnes, who operates a fuel mine near Midlothian, in Allegany county, reports that he with Clifton Skidmore, recently tapped an old entry that had been filled with water for very many years, and after drainage for several days was able to explore it. They found the rib-roof and pavement heavily coated with sulphur, the latter to a depth of three to six inches; a loaded 2-ton mine car, topped with lumps, was found standing on the "T" rail and the whole track intact. The coal in the car was likewise encrusted heavily with sulphur. Several lumps were examined showing the underneath surfaces were shiny black.

Mr. Barnes says the timber in this mine was in as good condition as when put there. The water had apparently petrified it. This old mine was known as the Jimmy Little place and was operated about forty years ago.

RELIEF DRIVE CHAIRMAN ASKS PEOPLE TO ASSIST

Legion and Scouts Seeking Clothing to Give to Needy

"Are you doing your bit to help relieve the suffering of the needy families in Garrett county during these cold winter months?" asks Edward C. Lawrence, chairman of the American Legion relief drive.

"Several weeks ago," he continued, "the Americen Legion and Boy Scouts launched a relief drive to aid the people of our county, and an outline of the manner in which it would be conducted was published in The Republican. This relief drive cannot be a success unless we receive the help of the people. We are not asking for money but only for discarded clothing and we believe there are many families in Oakland and other parts of the county who are in a position to help in this way.

"Pieces of clothing that have been packed away in a closet or trunk, that would help to keep somebody warm, will be received gladly by the Legion committee, and we are asking that you look in these discarded places. In attempting to aid everybody who is really in need we have placed in ten stores and business places in Oakland a small red box. With this box there are cards for names and addresses of parties having clothing to donate.

"Each Saturday members of the Legion and Boy Scout troop will collect anything the people have to offer."

STATE LEGISLATURE QUITS WITHOUT TACKLING TAXES

Adjourns Until Tuesday When State Budget Is Expected—Thirteen Bills Introduced

COBLENTZ IS EXCUSED

The General Assembly adjourned yesterday until next Tuesday without having tackled any of the problems presented by the administration in Governor Ritchie's message, which called for a reallocation of tax revenues and a special commodity tax to lower local taxation.

The members expect to return to Annapolis next week to receive the State budget for 1934 and 1935. No bills embodying the program for relief of property from heavy taxation, as set forth by Governor Ritchie, have appeared in either the House or the Senate. It is understood these would be forthcoming in the next week or so when the Governor has definitely decided on the commodities on which he will recommend a special tax.

Redistricting Bill In

In the House yesterday a measure which would change the boundaries of the six legislative districts of Baltimore to include "as nearly as possible equal population," was introduced by Delegates Mechau, Luther and Houck, of the Third Baltimore district.

Delegate William L. Conway, of the Fifth district, sponsored a resolution which was placed in the hands of the Grand Inquest Committee and which, if reported favorably, will subject the retail price of milk in Baltimore to a legislative inquiry.

Senator David McIntosh, Jr., of Baltimore county, introduced two bills to increase the fees paid by motor vehicles operating on passenger schedule and in the commercial traffic of the State, which he estimates will produce additional revenue of $400,000 annually.

Taxed On Mile Basis

Under these bills passenger-carrying vehicles would pay the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles one-sixth of a cent per mile for each seat in coaches operated over State highways, instead of one-eighteenth of a cent, and the rate of freight-carrying vehicles would be raised from a fifth of a cent to three-fifths of a cent jer ton mile.

Senator Earl Withgott, of Talbot county, chairman of the Militia Committee, introduced a measure which would permit the Governor of the State, on the recommendation of the ranking officer, to reduce the rate of pay of members of the National Guard in all classifications.

He also sponsored a measure which would authorize the Board of Public Works, composed of the Governor, the State Treasurer and Comptroller, to sell the Confederate Soldiers' Home at Pikesville and devote the proceeds of the sale to the improvement of property now held by the State in the name of the National Guard.

Offers Building Loan Bill

Senator Benjamin H. McKindless is the author of a bill introduced to permit insurance companies and building and loan associations to subscribe to stock of the Federal Home Loan Banks.

Two ecenomy measures sponsored by Delegate James J. Lindsey, Jr., of Baltimore county, were referred to the House Rules Comittee without debate.

One of these measures called for cutting the regular appropriation of stamps for members of the House from $25 worth to $10 and the savings thus effected—estimated by Mr. Lindsay at $1,770—would be "returned to the State Treasury forthwith."

Coblentz Is Excused

He also introduced an order to return "forthwith to the State Treasury" the amount saved by reducing the pay of general employes of the House of Delegates by twenty percent.

An order, introduced in the Senate and ratified by the members, excused Senator Emory L. Coblentz, of Frederick county, from attendance at any of the Senate sesions until such time as he shall deem it proper to present himself. Senator Coblentz announced last week that he would absent himself until his appeal from conviction by the Allegany County Circuit

JESUS FORGIVING SIN

Mark 2:1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins. Mark 2:10.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Forgiving a Man.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Forgiving a Man.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How We May Be Forgiven.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Jesus' Power Over Sin.

I. Jesus Preaching the Word (vv. 1, 2).

1. To whom (v. 2). It was to the surging crowd which was gathered about the house where Jesus was stopping. So great was the crowd that there was no room to receive them, even about the door. This house may have been the home of Peter where he had healed his wife's mother of a fever. As soon as it was noised about that Jesus was in the house, the multitudes gathered. It is always so, that the multitudes gather where Jesus is.

2. What Jesus preached (v. 2). He preached the Word before he wrought miracles, for his supreme mission was to make known God's will. Miracles were not an end in themselves, but to authenticate his work. The people came, some to be healed, and some out of curiosity. The Word of God should be preached to all so that the will of God may be known even though the hearers gather with an unworthy motive.

II. Jesus Forgiving Sins (vv. 3-5).

The man brought to him was suffering from the dread disease of palsy, but his deadly affliction was that of sin. Palsy was a type of sin. The miracle was wrought by Jesus in confirmation of his message. It was vitally connected with faith. Observe:

1. Faith coming to Jesus (v. 3). The actuating impulse of the palsied man and his four friends who carried him was faith. They believed that Jesus had power to save.

2. Faith overcoming difficulties (v. 4). Though prevented by the crowd from coming to Jesus, they ascended the outer stairway and let the afflicted man down through the roof into his presence. They disregarded conventionalities, knowing that the all-important thing was to go to the Lord with their need.

3. Faith rewarded (v. 5). No word was uttered by either the paralytic or his hearers. No words were needed. Their action was enough. The paralytic got more than he expected. He desired healing of the body and he received forgiveness of sins—the healing of the body plus forgiveness of sins.

III. Jesus Answering the Scribes (vv. 6-10).

1. Their objections (vv. 6, 7).

a. Why does he thus speak?

b. Who can forgive sin? They were entirely right in their reasonings that only God can forgive sins. Their blunder was in not perceiving him as God. The very one who was speaking and acting was the living God.

2. Jesus' answer (vv. 8-10). Knowing their inner thoughts and reasonings, he manifested unto them his essential deity in that he had power to know their thoughts. He inquired, "Which is easier, to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise and take up thy bed, and walk? But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (he saith to the sick of the palsy). I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house." He was willing that his power in the invisible realm should be tested by his power in the visible.

IV. Jesus Healing the Paralytic (vv. 11, 12).

1. His method (v. 11). He spoke the word and it was done. Christ's words were enough. This man was helpless and unable of himself to move, but with the command was given the strength to obey. It is always so, that when Christ commands he gives the strength to perform.

2. The obedience of the man (v. 12). He immediately arose, took up his bed and went forth among them all. The poor helpless man walked away with his bed upon his shoulder. At the words of Christ, disease and death flee away. This was a fine example again of divine healing.

3. The people were amazed, and glorified God (v. 12). They said, "We never saw it on this fashion."

World Movements

God dwells in the great movements of the world, in the great ideas which act in the human race. Find him there in the interests of man. Find him by sharing in those interests, by helping all who are striving for truth, for education, for progress, for liberty all over the world.

Confide In Him

Confide to God that which thou last from him, O thou soul weary of wandering! Confide to the truth that which is from the truth within thee, and thou shalt lose nothing.—St. Augustine.

The Disciples Sent Forth

Go your ways; behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves. Carry neither purse, nor script, nor shoes; and salute no man by the way.—Luke 10:3 and 4.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

I See By The Papers

Another barn has been destroyed by fire in Garrett county. A little foresight by erecting a dam and creating a water reserve in it would have gone far to prevent its entire destruction. More barns and farmhouses went up in smoke this year in Garrett county than in the past two or three years.

Farmers should take warning and prepare for what might happen in the best of families. An available water supply, though small, in case of necessity, might save your home.

Some health officer has stated that kissing on the neck gives just as much of a thrill and does not spread colds. I'll give it a try, but I don't see anything wrong with the old-fashioned way.

And while we are on the subject of kissing, some Chicago pastor refused to let a couple osculate at the altar at the conclusion of the wedding ceremony. It always makes a good send off, it appears to me, and most ministers expect a chance at the bride themselves.

And it looks like they are really going to reduce the taxes materially, something like fifty cents. That sounds more like it, instead of harping on reductions of minor items that knock off only a few cents, like some of these self-styled political reforming leaders have been talking about.

For instance, the bounty law. We just can't let that go. Think of all the game in the county. If we stopped killing the fox, cats and weasels, they would prey on our game and in a few years our industrious hunters would not have anything to hunt. So say those who get a few bounties occasionally, and the taxpayers continue to pay $1,500 yearly.

But our law enforcement officer is different. If we cut down on his expenses of investigating crime, there won't be much investigation and in a few years there will be more crime and criminals than one could imagine. And so they ask that protection to honest citizens be discontinued, cutting down the tax rate a cent or two, and the bounty law continued, keeping up the rate six or eight cents.

And then abolish the schools for an entire year. Wouldn't that fix things while all the other states progressed? A handicap the children might never overcome.

Or repeal laws requiring proceedings of public officials to be published thus leaving the actions of public officials concealed from the people, wouldn't that be nice? Newspapers will not lose much if official reports or proceedings of officials are curtailed or eliminated, but the taxpayers may suffer plenty if that procedure is followed. It is the protection of the public against defalcations in office, against the allowance of fraudulent bills, against conspiracies to cheat the taxpayer that demands publication of official proceedings, and officials or others who oppose it may often be the ones needing watching.

Boy, am I superstitious? After what happened last Friday, the thirteenth, there ought to be no question about it. I spent the day smashing mirrors, walking under ladders, raising umbrellas in the house and chasing black cats in front of me.

* * *

And what do you think happened that night when I went home?

Nothing! ! !

Clay Miller, writing in his "It Is Alleged" column in the Spencer (W. Va.) Times-Record, gives me a boost, and I suspect it is because several times I have obtained ideas from that very source. But his words are appreciated. He evidently knows that praises for a column writer are few and far between. Last week created a bumper crop in boosts, as I received three of them, two from this county. This makes me even with the board, as I count one boost as much worth as 20 knocks.

And, going him one better, I'll say that his column is the best coming into this office. As if my opinion might mean anything to his boss.

Says the Rotarian Magazine:

"WHAT A GIFT!—Had we the power to give the average city or town one gift, this New Year's season, we would give it freedom from gossip. That gift would mean more for human happiness in homes and communities than a million-dollar factory or a bumper crop of wheat on a dollar market.

"Gossip, plain devil-tongued talking about other people is an outstanding social curse of our day. More homes are broken, more happiness is ruined, more careers are downcast, more banks are closed by the careless repetition of guesses, rumors, scandals, half-truths and untruths than by any other one cause.

Any community which substitutes true neighborliness for gossip, sincere helpfulness and friendship for scandal-monging is on a good, smooth road to happiness and success."

That's one reason there's no scandal in this column this week, dear neighbors.

But, if you know any dirt, let me know, will you?

OAKLAND, MARYLAND

ADDRESSES OPEN LETTER TO MARYLAND CHILDREN

Claims They Are Already Important Citizens of This State

To: Certain highly important citizens in the counties of Maryland.
From: Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the State Department of Health.

You don't have to wait until you are of voting age to have a status as an important citizen in Maryland. By the time you are four days old your arrival is expected to be reported to the State Department of Health, and when you are six months of age the health officer of the county in which you live will send a letter to your mother advising her as to the ways by which your parents can safeguard you against certain infectious diseases. They are specially urged to have you protected against smallpox and diphtheria and this should be done before you are a year old.

At this age it is quite obvious that you cannot be expected to speak for yourself, but even without the aid of speech, if you want a thing very much indeed, you know that you usually succeed in getting it. So go to it. It will be to your advantage to obtain this protection from these diseases.

Since you are the one who will be particularly benefitcd by being protected against smallpox and diphtheria, it may interest you to know that vaccination against smallpox is much easier on a young person like yourself, say one to six months old or thereabouts, than it is on older persons. But you will probably have to be quite determined about having it done, because a good many mothers think there is no need to hurry. So they put it off as long as they can. It will have to be done before you start to school, at any rate, because the teachers are not allowed to enroll anybody who has not been protected against smallpox, so the sooner you have it done, the better; the best time is now.

There is always a great deal of smallpox in other parts of the country, and the only way we have kept comparatively free from it here in Maryland is by being very particular about having all of our citizens vaccinated against it when they are very young.

Diphtheria is another dreadful disease that can be kept out just as successfully as is smallpox. We are more likely to hear of diphtheria occurring in Maryland than of smallpox, because some mothers do not realize yet that children can be protected against it. You can see to it that your mother finds out about it.

Your doctor will be glad to vaccinate you against smallpox and to protect you against diphtheria. Get your mother to take you to him and have it done.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

Among the very few of the Targums which have come down to our day are three, on the Pentateuch, the Prophets, and on the Hageograph—Psalms, Job, Proverbs, Song of Songs, Ruth, Lamentations, Esther, Ecclesiastes.

The most important of the Pentateueh Targums is the one named after Onkelus, or Akylos, whose Greek version had become so popular that his Chaldee version was honored with being called after it. In its present form, this translation is said to date from the end of the third or the beginning of the fourth century A. D., though portions of it were collected and written down more than 100 years earlier. Scholars tell us that the language of this Targum is an Aramaic closely resembling that of Daniel; and it is an exeellent translation "for the people," which was its purpose.

Great care was exercised by this tianslator lest the divine dignity should suffer in the eyes of the multitude by too literal interpretation. Thus at this early day the dangers attending too great a popularization of Scripture language was foreseen, and carefully safeguarded, by these ancient scholars, who realized that the placc whereon they stood was holy ground. This Targum has very great value for exegetieal purposes, no less than for linguistie and antiquarian research.

The two other Targums on the Pentateuch, hitherto known as Targum Jonathan ben Uzziel and Targum Jerushalmi are merely later versions of the same Targum. That of Jonathan ben Uzziel was probably not put into literary form until the seventh century A. D., while the second is placed about the year 1000. This is the date of the discovery of Martha's Vineyard by Lief the Lucky, son of Eric the Red, who is supposed to have built the town where centuries later the skeleton in armor was found and which inspired Longfellow's poem.

It is supposed that originally the Jerusalem Targum embraeed the entire Old Testament; but nothing of it has survived but two recessions of the Pentateuch.

As a version this Targum is considered by scholars as relatively unimportant; but it is invaluable as a storehouse of allegories, parables, sagas, and like popular poetry of its time. It is said to abound with foreign terms, Greek, Persian, Latin and Arabie, while its grammar and language are exceedingly corrupt. Its general use lies not in a direct interpretation of the Bible itself but rather in the direction of Jewish literature, as well as of archeology and antiquities of the early Christian centuries.

WITHOUT RAILROAD PROSPERITY—WHAT?

An article in Railway Age on "Railway Purchases—A Vital Force in Business Recovery," brings out vividly the influence of the transport probelm on the lives of all workers, all farmers, all producers.

In the five years previous to 1930, railway purchases averaged over two billion dollars a year. In the past three years reductions in these purchases have amounted to almost $3,000,000,000.

This decline is greater than all the loans and appropriations made by the Federal Government for public works and relief.

It has brought distress to a multitude of communities, has affected every State in the Union and has thrown hundreds of thousands of workers, in a large number of industries, out of employment.

The iron and steel industries, the lumber and copper industries, the oil and coal industries and electric supply business, in the past, have counted on the railroads for a heavy percentage of their sales.

Restoration of railway purchasing power is indispensable to business recovery. No one can doubt that stimulated rail activity would be one of the greatest blows we could strike against unemployment, against low general purchasing power, against depression.

PROPOSED INCREASE IN INCOME TAX

The tendency of wealth to seek financial hibernation when income tax rates are unduly increased has often been pointed out. But little has been heard about the effects of high rates on the income of citizens in the lower brackets. Persons in moderate circumstances have no escape. Whatever surplus above expenses they manage to eke out they feel they must put lnto investments returning a higher yield than Treasury loans or Government bonds. The tax-emption feature holds no such appeal for limited earnings as for incomes in the upper brackets with the maximum tax rates.

The proposed increase of 50 per cent in the current income tax rates means considerably more than that to the average citizen. The lowered exemption and elimination of the remission of 25 per cent on "earned" income will result in burdening the taxes of the poor considerably greater than 50 per cent. It will make persons liable who heretofore have remained below the allowance for family and dependents. The taxing of a pittance is worse than the futaous policy of "soaking the rich." Many persons on modest salaries this year will pay three or four times the Federal tax they paid last year.

What will be the effect of this muleting? The answer is that the average individual will seek to balance his own budget by reducing personal expenses to the extent necessary to meet the Government's demand which the individual might properly consider his "fixed charges." Probably he will try to save more than the difference. As a result he will hit the manufacturer and retailer of commodities thus expurgated. Recently a correspondent wrote the Inquirer that the curtailment of letter writing which followed the increase in postage rates also had a tendency to cut down the sales of stationery. The same truth applies in a wider field. Contracting consumer power is a bad thing for business.

No such dire results would ensue if a manufacturer's sales tax were enacted. The difference of a few cents would be neglible in consumer power. The citizen does not have to create a reserve to meet his sales tax; he pays it as he goes along without worrying about it. But finding the money to pay an income tax is a whole-year task,

In New York, James W. Blake, writer of "The Sidewalks of New York," being found destitute and out of employment, was aided through the efforts of Al Smith.

HOW OUR DEBTS GREW

For the past two years we have had an increasing demand on the part of the public for a reduction in our public expenditures. We have now come to the time when there should be some appreciable effect of this sustained movement which has finally made the people tax conscious, and economy conscious. While the present session of Congress, judging from the current outlook, will accomplish little townrd the reduction of national expenditures and the balancing of the budget, it is likely that a special session of the new Congress will be called shortly after March 4. Then the new Democratic administration will have a chance to show what it can do on the all-important subject of reducing public expenditures. If it fails, then it will be just too bad for the future of the new administration and we are apt to see some startling changes after the 1934 election.

But all of the work of economy cnnnot be done by the national government. A great deal of it must come through the efforts of the states and the local government. Here again the situation is timely. Nearly all of our state legislatures are now in session or will be some time during the spring. It is now up to the people to see that their local representatives do something to help lighten the tax burden through the promotion of economy and the cutting down of public expenditures.

In order to understand just how far we must go in this respect one ought to consider for a moment just how far we have as a nation, inflated our expenditures. In a booklet recently published, Gertler, Devet and Company point out that the estimated public indebtedness of our federal, state and local governments in 1902 was $3,000,000,000. In the next decade it grew to a little less than five billions. Then the fun began. Now the estimated total debt of our various units of government is around $37,000,000,000. Just think of it! An increase of 1,113 percent from 1903 to 1932. During the same time the expenditures of our federal, state and local governments rose 860 percent.

"To make this huge sum more understandable"the article continues, "one dollar out of every three of the total income of our entire national population is consumed in the support of our government and their subdivisions. This orgy of spending by municipalities, with few exception, has been very little curtailed up to the present, even though the entire country has passed from a period of unprecedented inflation to one of dire depression during the past three years. The same voters who authorized unjustified bond issues are now demanding retrenchment in municipal and state expenditures, clamoring for reduction in taxes both personal and real.

"During the past year, reductions in budgets have of necessity been generally prevalent, but by no means have they been cut sufficiently, nor nearly as much as is possible; curtailments will have to be made in every branch of government; this requires immediate, honest, earnest, and scientific study and will be forced on politicians loath to give up their sinecures, in order that municipal credits be maintained or restored.

Retrenchments of at least 25 percent should be made by state and local governments; expansion programs should he drastically reduced; planned public works that are not absolutely necessary should be dedeferred; employment of men in distress should be on projects beneficial or of a self-liquidating nature. Large curtailments in operating costs could be effected through consolidations of bureaus, overlapping districts and departments where duplication of effort is most pronounced."

It is of course true that a start in economy has been made during the past year or so. There has of necessity been a reduction in the public budgets. But there is still a great distance to go if we are to deflate our public expenditures as they should be deflated to match the new era in which we are now living. A start has been made in many localities where expenditures have been cut and taxes are to be reduced this year.

But the people must not go to sleep on the job. The good work must he continued, and the numerous sessions of the state legislatures this year make a good place to continue.

A FLOUNDERING CONGRESS

Critical comment is being made throughout the nation because Congress has neither a definite program to meet current needs nor any nparent intention of trying to formulate such a plan during the present session.

The situation would be ludicrous rather than pathetic were it not for the fact that this year's budget is well over a billon dollars off balance. In these circumstances it is disturbing to feel that there is apparently no consensus In Congress as to what additional taxes, if any, are to be imposed or as to what economies, if any, are to be ordered. A drifting attitude is not new in Congressional experiences but this particular drift at this special time threatens to bury Federal economy so deep that the Roosevelt administration will have to dig long and hard before it can uncover it once more.

WHEN TO STOP ADVERTISING

When every man has become so thoroughly a creature of habit that he will certainly buy this year where he bought last year.

When younger, and fresher, and spunkier concerns in your line cease starting up and using the newspapers in telling the people how much better they can do for them than you can.

When nobody else thinks "it pays to advertise."

When population ceases to multiply and the generations that crowd on after you, and never heard of you, come on.

When you have convinced everybody whose life will touch yours, that you have better goods and lower prices than they can ever get anywhere outside of your store.

When you perceive it to be the rule that men who never do and never did advertise are outstripping their neighbors in the same line of business.

When men stop making fortunes right in your sight, solely through the discreet use of this mighty agent.

When you can forget the words of the shrewdest and most successful business men concerning the main cause of their prosperity.

When you would rather have your own way and fail than take advice and win.

When you want to get out of business with a stock on hand.

When wou want to get rid of the trouble of waiting on customers.

WHERE REPUTATION COUNTS

When it comes to fire apparatus for "town protection" the gallonage of a pump doesn't necessarily determine the quality of the finished products, nor does the horsepower of the motor necessarily determine its usefulness and dependability.

An "assembler" of fire apparatus, that is, a maker who buys a chassis here, a body there, and his equipment somewhere else and simply assembles it in his shop—might offer a pump or a motor equivalent in capacity to the products of pioneer manufacturers who build fire apparatus and nothing else. He might be able to sell his products at 20 or 25 per cent less money. But that doesn't mean that it is the best buy.

Almost anybody can make a thing a little cheaper—or a little worse. The few manufacturers who specialize in making fire apparatus only go far beyond rated capacities. They choose every bolt, every part, with an eye to its influence on the finished job—will it wear as long as possible, will it maintain its efficiency over long years of arduous service, will it be immune to failure? These are the questions they ask themselves. Quality does the answering.

Then, after "town protection" has been sold, they put at the disposal of the purchaser the full facilities of reliable service departments—something the casual manufacturer cannot do.

When a town buys a fire engine it shouldn't buy merely engineering figures. It should buy dependability based on time tested reputation.

AN APPEAL FOR THE DESTITUTE

It is earnestly hoped that citizens of Oakland will respond generously to the appeal which the American Legion and Boy Scouts are making for relief of destitute families.

Welfare workers report that a dozen or more families in and about town are in need of food and clothing, due to the lack of employment. There are no funds available to help them. Gifts of money will be gratefully received and judiciously expended, and any articles of clothing, as well as food of all kinds, will be collected by the Boy Scouts each Saturday morning and taken to a central place for distribution.

No doubt some of our people will desire to aid particular families, by donations or employment.

The names of those who are needy may be obtained from Mrs. L. F. Tower.

It is our responsibility to care for those who cannot help themselves. Let us make use of the boxes that have heen set up in various business places by the Legion and the Scouts, or if one desires to give food, money or clothing privately, Mrs. Tower and the local welfare committee will assist.

MAKE 1933 A SAFE YEAR

A publication of the National Safety Council carries an excellent New Year wish: "Three hundred and sixty-five safe and happy days to you for 1933."

If that wish could bear fruit, it would be a magnificent thing for the country. It would save thousands of lives which would otherwise be needlessly destroyed—it would keep for useful purposes the billion or so dollars that is wasted annually through accident—it would make for happier and better working conditions and more efficient industries. Nothing is so destructive to the morale of the worker as a series of serious accidents in his plant.

The safety movement has been making good progress for a long time. There has been a general decrease in the number and severity of accidents—aside from those caused by automobiles.

The careless, reckless and irresponsible driver kills about 33,000 people a year nowadays.

We can make 1933 the greatest safety year in our time. We can do it by giving the little effort, the little thought, the little care, that is needed to make our homes, our places of business and the public highways safer. We can do it by giving consideration to the rights of the other fellow. As individuals, we have the power to save thousands of irreplaceable lives this year—Let's do it!

Francis M. McCrobie, in a letter to the editor, stated that he was two days younger than the would-be-youngest soldier on record at the War Department and had a younger army record of nearly three years, having enlisted when 14 years and 6 months old.

Attempts were being made to reorganize the Mountain City Band, the membership having dwindled on account of the removal of a number from town.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

It is generally agreed that the Democratic victory in the 1932 election was due to the belief of a great majority of the voters that a change of administration might mean a change for the betterment in business. Few of the voters who helped bring about the change had any definite idea just how it was to be brought about. It was their belief, in many cases little more than a hope, that somehow or in some way there would be a new deal that would help things. The psychology was not unlike that of the player who asks for a new pack when the cards have been running consitently against him.

All Americans, regardless of their politics hope that a change for the better is coming. Up to this time, however, it must be admitted, that the Democratic leaders have given no evidence that they have a concrete plan for bettering conditions through legislation.

For example, the leaders of the majority party seem to be unable at this time to agree on any definite course for the fundamental balancing of the budget. For a time we were given to understand that most of the congressional leaders wanted a sales tax. But this was quickly dropped when the news came out that Governor Roosevelt was opposed to the sales tax. Then came the journey of the Democratic leaders to Albany to confer with the President-elect. This was followed by statements that the additional sales taxes necessary would be raised by soaking the incomes of the middle classes and cutting down the exemption of those with small incomes.

But immediately there came such a kick back to this proposal that it was apparently shoved into the background. Now we are told that the budget will be balanced not by raising taxes but by cutting expenses. If this can be done, the American people will take off their hats and admit that Congress is full of real statesmen.

But the evident lack of a definite program on taxation and the budget is already bringing sarcasm from the Republicans. Minority Leader Snell summed up the Republican view recently when he said:

"It is perfectly evident that the Democrats are not going to do anything about balancing the budget at this session. They don't even intend to try before ten or fifteen days before the end of the session. That means that they have thrown up in despair.

"The Democratic platform was just as emphatic on balancing the budget as it was on beer, and while they have spent more effort on beer than on balancing the budget, it is evident they will fall down on both.

"To the outsider looking on, it looks as if the President-elect is running out on his congressional leaders before they even get started.

"Is this the much-heralded cooperation between the President-elect and congressional leaders that we heard so much about during the last campaign? The President-elect says he is only a clearing house for ideas. I can tell him without fear of successful contradiction that if he is to lead his party during these strenuous times, he must be something more than clearing house. It will be necessary for him to have a program of his own and stand behind it for two successive days running."

But while there seems to be a lack of cohesion in Democratic forces let us not become too discouraged. Let it be remembered that the depression may right itself without further assistance from the government. Depressions have been known to do that very thing in the past. We are now more than three years along in the present era of business stagnation. It is about time that there were evidences of improvement. Nature will take its course regardless of Washington politics. Let us hope that the time for fundamental improvement is at hand.

STATE LEGISLATURE QUITS WITHOUT TACKLING TAXES

Court on charges in connection with the failure of the Central Trust Company of Frederick, of which he was president, had been decided by the Court of Appeals.

Seeks To Plaee County Treasury On Salary

State Senator Ridgely P. Melvin, of Anne Arundel county, is prepared to introduce measures in the General Assembly which would place the treasury of that county on a flat salary basis of $4,500 annually.

Under the present arrangement, the treasurer, C. Albert Hodges, receives approximately $9,000 yearly for the conduct of the office.

Mr. Hodges gets, he said, a yearly salary of $1,200, from which $120 is deducted as a ten percent contribution to the expenses of the local government.

In addition, he said. he receives approximately $2,500 annually for assessment of new property in the county at the rate of $2 for each $1,000 of assessed value.

He also receives, he said, four and a half percent of all the taxes he collects for the State, which amounts to about $5,500 annually. This is paid by the county, however, he said.

Mr. Hodges said he pays for the hire of "two or three clerks" to take care of the business he has under the fee system out of the revenues he gets from it.

"I am responsible for all errors," he said, "and, after all, it isn't such n big salary."

Turnips Have A Place

In winter the choice among cheap vegetables other than potatoes is limited chiefly to cabbage, tomatoes, some greens and some of the roots. Of the roots, says the Bureau of Home Economics of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, carrots and sweet potatoes are richest in protective values. Turnips, however, have a place because they are cheap and because when served they are likely to be eaten in quantities sufficient to make their vitamin and mineral content an item worth considering in the low-cost diet. Turnip kraut is an Old World dish that is familiar to many people in this country today, and turnips are one of the makings of a New England boiled dinner, a stew, or a vegetable soup, any of which may be a balanced meal in itself.

RECIPES

Quick Turnip Soup

One quart milk, 1 onion, cut in half, 1 tablespoon flour, 2 tablespoons of melted fat, 2 cups grated raw turnip, chopped parsley. Heat the milk in a double boiler with the onion, add the flour and fat, which have been well blended, then the turnip and salt. Cook until the turnip is tender or for about ten minutes, and remove the oninon. Sprinkle chopped parsley over the soup just before serving.

Savory Vegetable Stew

Two cups diced salt pork, 4 cups diced rutabaga turnip, 2 small onions, 1 teaspoon sage, 4 cups hot water, 1 teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper. Fry the diced salt pork until crisp. Remove the pork and some of the fat from the skillet and brown the onion and turnip in the remaining fat. Add the potato, salt, sage and water. Cover and simmer until the vegetables are tender. Remove the cover and cook until the stew has thickened somewhat. Add the crisped salt pork, pepper, and more salt if necessary. Serve with crisp toast.

Turnips In Salad

For salads with turnips diced or sliced the following combinations are suggested: Raw turnips and apples; raw turnips and raw carrots; raw turnips and onions; cooked peas and carrots and raw turnips; cooked potatoes and raw turnips.

Fable of the Corrupting Influences

By GEORGE ADE

(©, Bell Syndicate.)—WNU Service.

ONCE there was a tall-browed Sociologist, a Statistical Shark and a card-index Hound who wanted to find out why so many Mortals wander from the Straight and Narrow and run afoul of the Law. Instead of Investigating the Miracle of Anyone complying with All of the 8,000 harsh, restrictive Measures passed by mushhead Legislators during the last Ten Years, he elected to prepare a wise Magazine Article and point out the particular and definite Causes of Delinquency.

So he went to a Jail where a lot of hardened Offenders were caged up and proceeded to quiz them and get their Life Histories and find out why they had turned out to be Tough Nuts instead of respected Ttotarians.

In the first Call he came across a rather good-looking Young Chap who wore a Blue Sweater and was pulling at a lond-smelling Fag and seemed rather bored, not to say annoyed, to find himself under such unplensant Duress.

"What have they got on you?" asked the Sclentific Researcher.

"They say I'm a Stick-Up Guy and Hijacker, but I've been Framed," was the courteous Reply. "Whenever anything rough is pulled the Bulls have to hang it on to some Patsy with a Record. I happened to come aloug and they pinched me."

Humble Beginnings.

"I should like to inquire as to the Circumstances leading up to your present unhappy Predicament," said the Investigator. "Tell me somethiag about your Environment duriag the Formative Period."

"I came of an Outfit that was hardboiled," replied the Juvenile Crook. "The Old Man was a Bar Fly and all the Training I ever got from him was to keep my Guard up and duck Right Hand Swings. Mother's Conception of keeping House was to put Something on the Stove and let it boil for Hours and Hours while she read Love Stories to be continued in our Next. As you know, a Woman who is keeping Track of a dozen Serials dealing with the Divine Passion and the Eternal Triangle, cannot spare any Time for her Family. We lived in a Dump back of the Switch Yards. I did not see a Tree until I was Eight but I owned a pair of trained Dice when I was Six. No one ever gave me any Moral Guidance.

"My first definite Ambition was to kill a Copper. The Drag Net Got me while I was in Grammar School and I learned in the Police Court that I was a Gangster. Since then I have been arrested every time I spit. Now I'm hooked for a Stretch just because I went out for an Automobile Ride with some Buddies who had sawed-off Shotguns in the bottom of the Car, to be used in Case they were interfered with."

"Exactly as I surmised," said the Visitor. 'You are the Innocent Victim of Heredity and Evil Influences. The only Reason our Malefactors want to Malefact is that they have been denied access to the ethical Refinements of Modern Civilization."

The next Inmate to claim the Attention of the Seeker after Truth needed only a Clean Shave and a White Tie to make him look like the Valedictorian at a first-rate Theological Seminary. It seems that he had been yanked up for Swindling, Forgery and Kiting Checks. He looked as honest as Henry Ford and his Blue Eye was very candid and the Investigator knew that here was a Bird who would have gone Straight if he had been given a Chance.

The Big Reason.

"Was your Male Parent a Soak or did he just go on a Bat once in a While?" asked the Student of Criminology.

"Father never put his Nose into anything harder than Buttermilk," was the Reply. "He had Side-Whiskers hanging straight down, passed the Contribution Basket and is said to have been the first Reformer to hit upon that Happy Expedient known as the Eighteenth Amendment."

"Then we must hang it all on your mother. To what kind of Frivolity was she addicted that she should have failed to keep Tab on the Offspring?"

"You are not guessing well today. The dear old Mater lectured to Clubs on the Training of Youth. She came of a Massachusetts Family which smelled of Harvard for over a Century. She and Dad were the Intellectual Arc Lamps of the Town in which I was coached for the Ministry. They had me tutored so that I would not come in contact with the Foreign Spawn in the Public Schools. I was the Prize Exhibit of our Sunday School and sat in the Lap of every Prominent Lady in our State. It took them two Years to pick out a College good enough for me. I could show you my Phi Beta Kappa badge if I hadn't hocked it in Omaha.

"If you were given the Advantage of every sweet and uplifting Influence, I am at a Loss to understand why you turned out to be a Hotel Beat and floated Phoney Paper and now have seven or eight Aliases."

"If you won't let it go any further, I will put you Hep," said the Prisoner. "I needed the Money."

When the Investigator tackled the next Case he was somewhat dazed. Imagine his Surprise when the Warden told him that the Maiden with the pensive Smile, the neat but elegant Toggery and the simple Personality of a Quaker Milkmaid had done nothing whatever but bring out a large blue Cannon and proceed to bump off Friend Husband.

By the Beautiful Sea.

The Researcher told her that his Heart was bleeding because he could see that she never should have been incarcerated.

"Possibly you had to shoot because he was brutal to the Children?" suggested the Visitor.

"One cannot have Children without giving up One's Afternoons," was the Reply. "Besides, we lived in an Apartment."

"Did he ever drag you around by the Hair or put Black and Blue Marks on your Arms?"

"I can't be sure until I talk to my Lawyer again. He is working on my Story and says that if we get an emotional Jury of confirmed Bachelors I will be acquitted on the First Ballot. They had no Business locking me up at all. This Gluk that I was hooked up with wore striped shirts and had a fierce line of Low Comedy and I just had to kill him."

"Probably you acquired a Streak of Lawlessness because you were permitted to run wild during your Girlhood," suggested the Psycho-Analyst.

"Say, I am and always have been a Perfect Lady. I spent four years in a Finishing School and if you don't think I am the Class for Poise, Politeness and Pronunciation, come over to the Criminal Court next Week and watch me on the Witness Stand. I will make a Humming Bird seem loud and uncouth."

The Investigator retired to a Corner and looked over his Notes and began to feel dizzy in the Head. He didn't like to quit cold on any of his beautiful Theories so he approached another Cell and accosted a middle-aged Prisoner of serious Mien and noble Countenance.

"How come?" asked the Expert.

"They seem to be almost sure that I am guilty of Bigamy," was the Reply. "Up to Date they have found Emma, Louisa, and Marcella. I am sitting here and hoping that Luella, Genevieve, Therese and Natalie do not happen to see my picture in the Paper. If too many show up the Case will begin to look dark."

"I suppose you went off your Bean about Women because you were such a licentious Rake in your early Manhood?"

"From 1892 to 1917 I was Keeper of a Light-House which rose abruptly from the Sea about six miles from the Mainland," replied the Prisoner. "During all these Years I read Books sent to me by pious Relatives. So you see, I am not to Blame."

The Magazine Writer changed his Plans and instead of doing a Piece which accounted for Increased Lawlessness he prepared an Article, with Sketches, showing how Any One who has a File and a Pair of Pliers can make his own Radio Set.

Future Houses May Be Warmed by Wall Paper

A new kind of wall paper which warms the rooms in which it is used has passed successfully through a series of tests. It was fitted to the ceilings of some of the cabins in the Canadian Pacific railway's liner Duchess of Richmond. Occupiers of the cabins found that in the coldest weather they were able to keep them at a pleasant temperature.

The wall or ceiling covering, which is a British invention, is constructed rather on the lines of the suits worn by airmen in very cold weather or when they contemplate ascents to great heights. Into the fabric of which this clothing is made is woven a network of fine wires through which an electric current is passed. The current heats the wires and warms the wearer.

These new wall and ceiling papers are constructed of thin insulating material in which wires are embedded in such a way that they are invisible. By connecting the wires to the electric mains the walls and ceiling can be made to give out a gentle and pleasant heat.—London Tit-Bits.

Early Egyptian Rulers

The Hyksos were, according to the Egyptian annals, a conquering nomadic race from the East, who, under Salatis, their first king, took Memphis and rendered the whole of Egypt tributary. Their name probably means foreign kings, the explanation shepherd kings, being of later origin. The date of their invasion and conquest was about 1700 B. C. The seat of their rule was the strongly garrisoned fortress of Avaris, on the northeast border of the Delta. They followed Egyptian customs, and their six monarchs took Egyptian names. It seems likely also that a great part of Syria was subject to them. The only detailed account of them by any ancient writer is an unreliable passage of a lost work of Manetho, cited by Josephus in his rejoinder to Apion.

Love

The greatest thing in the world. It is the cornerstone of happiness. Loyalty goes with it. It enfolds the cradle with protecting arms; it shelters the old; it gives courage and strength to the breadwinner; and enables the tired mother to sing. The love from mother's heart is wonderful. It reaches out to her offspring without limit. It conceives its objection in innocence and endures to the end. The binding between mother and child is the source of love. It gives perfection to human endeavor, because we like that which we love.—Exchange.

Extravagant, But—

By KATE WILLIAMS

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

AND he—Mr. Waverly Jones, editorial director of the Stanley Publications—would look at her with searching steel-blue eyes and say: "Tell me all about yourself, Miss Penrose." She wasn't quite sure about the steel-blue eyes.

That would be after she, Alice Penrose, had been admitted to his faultlessly furnished inner office. Mr. Waverly Jones sitting on one side of an enormous glass-topped mahogany desk, and she alert and eager on the other side. Or, perhaps they would be sitting opposite each other at a secluded table at the Metropole, or whereever it was that Mr. Waverly Jones went for luncheon. Mr. Jones' secretary had told Alice to call at half-past twelve. She'd been sitting in the reception room now for half an hour.

The letter of introduction from Bert Jeffreys had been very brief—simply telling Mr. Jones that Alice was an ambitious young woman who wanted a job on one of the Stanley publications, and knew what it was all about. Mr. Jones, Alice felt sure, would want to know more about her. At first she had planned to take along her scrap book, containing some of her best fan mail, clippings from local papers, when she had talked to women's literary societies on "The Modern Magazine," a memo of congratulation from her last editor about one of her best captions. But in the end she decided to leave the scrap book at home. She would show it to him another time. More wisely, she had squandered twenty-five dollars on an autumn street dress of the latest mode, and she had come to the Stanley offices straight from a beauty parlor—her cheeks still tingling from the gentle patting and ice compresses of a facial treatment. Not just one of the ordinary two-fifty massages, but the extra special five-dollar kind that made you gasp with joy when you first looked at yourself in the mirror after it was over.

Alice pulled off her spotless white gloves and looked approvingly at her perfectly manicured hands. Waverly Jones would notice them, of course, and they bore noticing. Alice was glad now that they were no smaller.

She had been extravagant, but it was justifiable extravagance. When Bert Jeffreys had given her the letter of introduction to the important Waverly Jones, he had assured her that she would be lucky if she even got an interview—luckier still if she got a job. There were hundreds of young women, as well equipped as she, who were trying to get in at Stanley's. "If he sees you it will be just a question of salesmanship. That's up to you. Either you'll sell him or you won't."

Alice had plenty of time to think it over, as she sat waiting so long in the reception room. She'd try to act unruffled and sure of herself, merely alluding to the fact that she had gone to Radcliffe, perhaps not even mentioning the fact that she'd taken honors in English. She'd let Mr. Jones know how desperately she needed a pay envelope.

Alice opened her handbag and considered the wisdom of lighting a cigarette. It would help pass the time, but on the other hand it might spoil the perfect line of lipstick deftly applied by the beauty expert.

The telephone had rung on the receptionist's desk. "Yes, she's still here," the girl had said, and then, turning to Alice, "Mr. Jones' secretary says that if you're the young lady Mr. Ben Jeffrey sent up, he wants you to hop in a taxi and go over to Jersey to the printing plant. They're in a terrible rush closing the December issue; they're sending out a dummy with some late revisions. Mr. Jones says for you to get right over there with this revised dummy and then telephone back here to Miss Calium, the editorial department—and she'll tell you what to do."

The boy had come out to the reception room with a bulging pasted-up dummy which he put in Alice's hands. "Mr. Jones' secretary says to keep track of your taxi fares, so you can put in an expense slip," he said.

Printing plant—over in New Jersey—pasted dummies—last minute corrections. For the minute it sounded all Greek to Alice—the girl that Bert Jeffreys had said "knew all about it." Somewhat dazed, Alice took directions for getting to the plant from the reception clerk, and thanked her stars that she hadn't spent her last five dollars for the new hat.

Two hours later Alice sat at a shabby desk under the gray shaded electric light in the printing plant, the corrected dummy before her with memos of still later correcting that she had taken over the telephone from headquarters. The close-fitting long sleeves of her new autumn dress were rolled up to the elbow. There was a smudge of ink on the white satin collar of her dress and another on her nose. She had been too busy to push back the wisps of hair that had strayed down over her forehead.

And then at half-past five the telephone had rung from headquarters. "That will be all for today," Mr. Jones' secretary had said. "The foreman over there and our Miss Calium says you seem to know what it's all about, and I guess you do. Mr. Jones hasn't time to talk to you now, but he says, will you report tomorrow morning. He doesn't get in until ten, but I guess you better be on hand at nine. He's decided to take you on."

An "Average Girl" Answers Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt

The following open letter to Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was written by Osta M. Underwood, an 18-year-old student in Nashville business college, Nashville, Tennessee. In a note to an editor Miss Underwood says:

"I cannot hope for my letter as wide publicity as Mrs. Roosevelt's statement received. I beg that you will help voice the protest of the 'average girl' of the United States by giving this space in your paper."

Nashville, Tennessee,
December 14, 1932.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Governor's Mansion, Albany, New York.

Dear Mrs. Roosevelt—An article in our morning paper saying that a statement of yours brought forth a "shocked protest" from a group of women leaders in Topeka, brings forth an equally shocked protest from me. You were quoted as saying that "the average girl of today faces the problem of learning very young how much she can drink of such things as whiskey and gin and sticking to the proper quantity." . . .

If you have been correctly quoted, you surely do not know the "average girl of today." I would not undertake to inform you were I not an "average girl of today."

I am eighteen years of age; I was graduated from a standard high school a little more than a year ago, and I am now attending the Nashville business college. I cannot remember one instance when I have seen a girl of my own age under the influence of liquor, and I can remember seeing but three boys of my own age intoxicated, or even "drinking." I am a member of no dry organization. I am no prig I am merely an "average girl" who is indignant at hearing girls accused of something of which they are not guilty.

Instead of drinking, we "average" young people are planning in due course of time to run our respective communities and the United States, while the drinking low-down-high-ups are reaping their crop of wild oats.

Drinking and such things went out of style with the "post-war" group of young people. Drinking and many other things of which we are accused are frightfully old-fashioned. The young people of today are interested in athletics and many other things that require a strong body, a clear brain, steady nerve and quick thinking, and all of these things drink destroys. The girls and boys of today enjoy sports and games that challenge the mind. Girls of today are going into the business field because they like it. You can't be successful in the business field if you are in the habit of drinking. No stenographer can take dictation or do typing who has a "hang-over" headache, nor can she perform many other duties well. Our pride makes us want to do things well.

It is true that in some groups in thickly populated sections, in some large cities, in some communities, such conditions as you spoke of do exist—but you said "average."

Some wet agitators have said they want legal liquor for the sake of the young people—that they are drinking any and everything now—that at least it would be pure if it were legal, government-inspected liquor. Let me tell you—we don't need liquor for the sake of the young people. We don't even like the taste of it. We don't like the effects it produces. If the older people want it, let them say so; but they should at least have the courage to say THEY want it, and not try to hide behind a false statement that it is for our sakes. If we, the young people, were allowed to vote on the question, the proposition to legalize alcoholic beverages would be defeated by an overwhelming majority. If the people of voting age can withstand the wet wave just long enough for us, the average boys and girls, to get our vote, you may be sure that alcoholic beverages will never again be legalized. We cannot afford to hazard our future for drink. We do not want it.

You don't know the "average girl," Mrs. Roosevelt. To get the average you must take all of us the country over, and doing that you will find that we may not be saying much, but we have our opinions—and they are NOT in favor of legalized alcoholic beverages, and they are not in favor of the illegal stuff used now. No, the "average girl" does not have to learn early how much she can drink, and she doesn't keep within that quantity because there is no need. We do not drink the stuff at all.

Sincerely yours,
OSTA M. UNDERWOOD.

Fable of Leroy's Nifty Exhibit

By GEORGE ADE

(©, Bell Syndicate.)—WNU Service.

ONCE there was a jovial Wight named Leroy Gadsble and when he left Paluka to seek a Laurel Wreath and a Wheelbarrow full of Jack in the seething Metropolis, the Weekly Efflatus spoke truly when it said that the Best Wishes of the community went with the respected young Townsman. He was to the half-portion City known as Paluka what the pale-faced Prince is to the British Isles, viz., the Double Carnation of the Botanical Section. He was the blue-eyed Son of Destiny, the chief Ring-Taller and Loud Noise. Some Bucko!

In addition to having a Social Status so elevated that he was Miles and Miles above the common or sport-shirt variety of Slicker who clogged up the Pool Rooms, he had earned the outspoken Regard of the Hard Element because he was a Demon on Second Base and had hung up a bloody Record as Half Back.

Sometimes you find a Lad who has Money, Looks, Horse-Power, Polite Manners, Sand, Gumption, and open-faced Democracy, all mixed together to make him King of the Works. Leroy was husky, amiable, accommodating and suavely masterful. No one in Paulka felt like kiddlng him about the Spats and the Walking Stick. The Boy who can knock off Blocks has a Right to wear Anything that suits his idle Fancy. One who is curly-headed and has the Bleeps with which to overturn an Ox can do no Wrong, or, if he does, he can get away with it.

Long before he escaped to the larger Opportunities of the Big Burg, every Tessie around the Place was ready to be overpowered by his Brute Strength, but he played no Favorites.

The Latest Model.

Word came that he was thriving in his new Environment and finally arrived the Cards telling that Beatrice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand Wetherby was the Lucky Girl, with the Ceremony at the Church and a Reception at the Home of the Bride's Parents.

There was Crape hanglag from many a Chandelier after the sad Tidings had been circulated. Everyone hoped for the Best but just knew that she wasn't good enough for Leroy. He had the Makings of a swell Husband and it would be Tough Luck if he drew a Blank. Some of those that had been grown in Paluka certainly seemed good enough, even for a Gadsble, and so there was a general, not to say aching, Curiosity to get a Peck at the Goddess who was so much superior to the home-grown Article.

When Leroy brought his 1932 Model Bride out to Paluka so as to get her used to his Relatives, it was not known to Beatrice that she was about to be put under the Microscope and given the Acid Test. If she had been wise to the Situation, she would have known that in order to make good she would have to be a peerless Combination of Cleopatra, the Venus de Milo, Queen Marie of Rumania, Elsie Janis and Mary Roberts Rinehart. She had to have Everything and, even then, maybe she couldn't put it over and make the Grade.

They saw her first at a Reception given by Pa and Ma Gadsble in the Ancestral Palace with the Cupola on top of it. She was sparebuilt, with the general Lines of a Racer. She seemed laid out for Speed rather than Endurance. She had the usual number of Eyes and her Bobbing undoubtedly had been done in a Beauty Shop instead of the Gem Tonsorial Parlors and her up-and-down Frock was figured with Gold, so that even the most hard-boiled Critics would not discover many flaws in the Tout Ensemble.

In the Old Days.

Nevertheless, practically every Female Member of the Smart Set of Paluka said, after getting a Flash at Beatrice, "Well, I'll declare!"

It is almost impossible to indicate in cold Type just how they said it. There was more or less Emphasis on "declare" but the second Word was not neglected and there was, also, quite a bit of Stress on the "Well." The manner in which they ejaculated "Well, I'll declare!" seemed to indicate that they were surprised to discover that Leroy had married a fair-sized Mortal of the Genus Flapper instead of an Angel with a Halo encircling her Head and two fully developed Wings sticking out behind.

What helped to complicate and embarrass the Situation from the very Start was the Fact that nearly all of the Men seemed to cotton to her and gave her the rolling Eye and the prolonged Hand Clasp. They seemed to think that she was fully up to Plans and Specifications, whereas the Women Folks all began to Yes-But. They said her Clothes had been picked out by an Expert but they didn't think that She, Herself, was anything to rave about. When they all said the same Thing they figured that they must be right.

Mrs. Pilklns seemed to voice the Consensus when she said that Mrs. Gadsble had a certain doll-like Beauty and a kind of Self-Assurance which gave the Impression of Poise but her Face somehow seemed lacking in Character, possibly because she had a Weak Mouth.

Undoubtedly Cain's Wife told Cain that she would try to get along with Abel's Wife and would even return Calls and exchange Dress Patterns, but she never could trust to the utmost a Woman who had such a Weak Mouth.

All Old Stuff.

When Elizabeth was told that Mary Queen of Scots had been duly-executed at the Tower, she said: "It is too bad that I had to have her Head cut off but I knew she would start something, sooner or later. She was a Woman who could not be depended upon. She had a Weak Mouth."

It may be explained that a Weak Mouth is the kind possessed by any Person who is shy on Popularity with the Party of the Second Part.

Beatrice might have overcome the awful Handicap if she had known that she was in Dutch and that the Cards had been stacked against her. She thought she would be the real Wow in the Home Town just because Leroy was Ace High. She seemed to think it was her Cue to gush over the simple Villagers and let them understand that she didn't think she was any classier than they were, even if was a high-class Pippin from the Avenue while they were a lot of web-footed Hicks. The more she gurgled, the more she gummed up the Program.

She said she loved Paluka because it was such a quaint old Place with such a simple Background and so many droll Characters. This, to the Residents of a Municipality which was black in the Face from trying to be busy and hustling and modern and up-to-date. Nothing that Beatrice said about Paluka could have been used in a Folder issued by the Chamber of Commerce.

She seemed to regard Paluka as a Page out of "The Old Homestead" or "Way Down East," while the Residents flattered themselves that London, Paris and New York City didn't have much of an Edge on them, coming right down to it.

It wasn't because she smoked Cork Tips or was willing to fly at Anything which came out of a Shaker. All of the local Janies under the age of 60 were trying to be True Sports of the Country Club Variety.

Where she crabbed Herself was in being surprised to learn that the untutored Yokels already knew about the Devices of Satan and didn't have to take lessons. She took particular Pains to show the Country Yaps an improper Dance Step which they had completely worn out about Two Months previously.

Individual Sole Master of His Worldly Fate

It is a strange philosophy which seeks its course and fate in the portents of the stars, or in the lines upon the hand. No trait of human life shows as clearly how tardy and tedious our progress from the superstitions and omens of the barbarians. The ancient Greeks and Romans, and their Phoenician predecessors, always consulted the oracles before a battle or other epochal event, and fatuously believed that the outcome was previsaged in the flight of a bird, or the color of a cloud.

We, in these days, could far better mold our destiny and achieve our ends were we to employ the time and money spent in the cell of some astrologer, phrenologist or palmist in constructive, earnest effort for the task or duty of life immediately before us. The greatest of English poets has most wisely said that our fate lies not in our stars but in ourselves. What a world of truth there is in that brief epigram!—Exchange.

Razor Has Lasted Long

When razors were weapons and not hoes, an ancestor of Oliver Bollard, age seventy-two, Berlin (Mich.) farmer, bought one made of Damascus steel with a bone handle. That was 200 years ago. Since then the razor has been in daily use in the Bollard family, being handed down from father to son, the present owner having obtained it when he was nineteen years old. Constant honing has worn off the maker's name and the handle is no thicker than a piece of cardboard, but Bollard asserts the razor has still another century of service left.

Historic Trees

The trees on the front terrace of Carvel hall at Annapolis, Md., are between 250 and 300 years old. They are Allanthus trees, the Chinese tree of heaven. No one seems to know how they happened to be planted on the front terrace of Carvel hall. They were brought from China in a sailing ship considerably over 200 years ago. The house in front of which they stand is the Prince George street entrance of Carvel hall hotel. It was built in 1764 by William Paca, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence and the third governor of Maryland.—Exchange.

Our Atmosphere

I know of no more encouraging fact than the unquestionable ability of man to elevate his life by a conscious endeavor. It is something to be able to paint a particular picture or to carve a statue, and so to make a few objects beautiful; but it is far more glorious to carve and paint the very atmosphere and medium through which we look, which morally we can do.—Thoreau.

MT. LAKE PARK

National Affairs

Generally speaking, it is not within the province of a country correspondent to attempt to fill his space with other than merely local news, but in these times, when the whole peoples nre more or less seared by the scorching results of the past three years, the doings, or lack of doings, of the Congress becomes news to the citizens of Mt. Lake Park just the same as it does to the people of Maine or California. In other words no major bill ean be acted upon by the national House or Senate that does not directly affect the people of this small community. We have the right, therefore, to commend or to criticize. And during the past week our safety valve has been at the popping-off point because of what seems to us the almost criminal obstruction of the legislative wheels by the filibuster of the Kingfish Senator. If the old rules of the Senate are such that an asinine exhibition by one of the members can not be checked, then those rules should be amended so that important relief ano other measures can be enacted into laws.

While this fiddling while Rome hurns attitude is being maintained by the five-day speech of the members, the rest of the country suffers.

But there is another class of citizens, in contrast, to whom all honor is due. We speak of the welfare workers. Paid workers, and volunteers are laboring day and night to relieve distress, to check the pangs of hunger in literally millions of human beings. These together with the generous ones who furnish the money, food and clothing, are the ones who will save this country from itself, for a hungry people are a dangerous people.

M. E. Church Anniversary

The plans for the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Mt. Lake Park Methodist church are not yet completed. We know it will be an interesting event and many long forgotten historical items will be gathered for publication. The history of this church is practically the history of the Park. Rev. Middaugh has promised us these facts for publication in the next issue. We have in mind many, both permanent residents and those who are summer visitors, who will delight in having recalled to memory events connected with the early history of the Park, and especially the church they and their parents attended. We have named Rev. Middaugh as the promisee, so if you fail to find the items here next week, you will know where the responsibility lies. We may say, however, that at least twenty voices, mostly young people, responded to the practice call at the parsonage Tuesday evening, and from what we know of the program it will be really worth while.

Night Prowling

Bailiff Wiley is usually an even-tempered man, but with him patience has ceased to be a virtue. There is too much night prowling in the Park and too many houses being entered. Evidence of the guilty parties is not going to be hard to secure, if the depredations continue. Some of the young men of the Park, of the better class and of good standing, have determined that the good name of this community for law and order, must be upheld. And they are in earnest. If the State's Attorney gets the goods on the guilty—well, it will really be too bad.

There is one way in which we householders can add to our own comfort. That is, by simply throwing the ashes from our furnaces nnd stoves onto the public crossings. With the excess of moisture in the ground and the frequent thawing and freezing, some of them are almost impassable. If your crossing does not need them, spread them in the road.

Tableland Association

The governing board of the Allegany Tableland Association held its quarterly meeting and a luncheon at the White Swann hotel in Uniontown last Saturday. The meeting was well attended, with representatives from six of the eight member counties present. Following the general business meeting, a wide discussion was had in regard to plans for the complete organization of all of the eight counties comprising the Association. Applications for eleven county units were accepted.

The secretary of the Uniontown Chamber of Commerce attended the meeting nnd assured the members of the active, whole-hearted cooperntion of his body in any plans looking to the success of the Tableland plans.

The next meeting of the governing board nnd the assembly will be held sometime the latter part of March at n place to he selected.

Some of the outstanding Rural Russett potatoes shown by 4-H Club boys at the Garrett County Potato Show in Oakland during the past fall.

POTATO DISPLAY ONLY TYPICAL OF WORK HERE

Some of Entries Shown Won Honors Here and in State Show

The display of rural russet potatoes shown in the picture on this page is only typical of the type of work being done in Garrett county by 4-H club boys, Dr. R. A. Jehle, pathologist for the University of Maryland Extension service, stated.

The particular potatoes shown in the picture are some that carried off honors at the annual Garrett county potato show held in Oakland during the fall, and were grown by the same persons who carried off honors in the state-wide show at Baltimore early in January.

According to Dr. Jehle, the work of the club boys has had a beneficial effect upon the potato industry in Garrett county. Before this work was begun the quality of seed stock used by the great majority of farmers was below average and very little certified seed was produced in the county. When the boys began to get such good yields, many of them strikingly larger than those obtained by their neighbors and fathers, the older heads became interested. As a result there has been no trouble in selling their potatoes for seed, about 1,000 bushels having been disposed of in this manner the first year, 3,000 bushels the second year and 5,000 bushels in 1932.

Dr. Jehle says that many of the club boys get yields of 275 bushels to the acre and a few have obtained more than 400 bushels. This is quite a contrast to the old 100 bushel yields obtained formerly.

Five new certified seed potato clubs were organized the past year in Garrett county, and fifty-nine fields with a total of 100.75 acres, were certified in the county as compared with 43 fields and a total of 61.75 acres in 1931.

The vocational agricultural departments of the various high schools have cooperated in this work.

The Transformed City

Along the road to Tomorrow a young man strolled in search of the wonders of the Future. Moonbeams played about him and the air was full of stardust, and it was not long before weariness overcame him and he fell asleep by the wayside. When he awoke, he continued on his way until a city appeared. Quickening his pace, he was soon at its gates. There he inquired of him who stood on guard the name of the city. "It is called Yesterday," was the reply, and the young man gaped in surprise. You see, he was a very young man and one who had much to learn—particularly that Tomorrow is certain to become Yesterday when one falls asleep by the wayside.—Detroit News.

TWENTIETH AMENDMENT IS ADDED TO CONSTITUTION

"Lame Duck" Ouster Plan Of Congress Becomes Law When 38 States Ratify Amendment

TO INAUGURATE JAN. 20

After ten years of trying and a hundred of waiting, the United States moderninzed its political machine on Monday by eliminating defeated officials—the "Lame Ducks"—from government.

A twentieth amendment was written into the constitution declaring that after this year both the President and the newly chosen Congress shall take office the January following November's election, and that the old short-term sessions of Congress which for so long has clogged the political machinery with its ineffectiveness, shall be held no more. The present one is the last.

Thirty-six of the states of the union ratified the amendment in less than one-tenth the time it took to convince Congress that the country demanded abolition of this lumbering antiquity.

Missouri 36th State to Ratify

Missouri completed the ratification, seizing the distinction of being 36th approving state by a wide-awake maneuver. Its House was to meet at 2 o'clock to act on the amendment already ratified by the Missouri Senate. The Massachusetts House was to do exactly the same thing but had the one-hour advantage of being in the eastern time zone. The Missouri speaker rounded up his members for a ten a. m. session and the job was quickly done.

Later in the day, though no more were needed, Georgia and Utah added their ratifications, bringing the total to 38. Massachusetts and Nevada, which also hoped for the 36th place, postponed final action. There were prospects, however, that this might become the one amendment to be ratified by unanimous vote of the 48 states. Every legislature that has not ratified already is now in session.

Though actually part of the constitution from Monday the amendment will not be proclaimed in force until the Secretary of State receives the 36th formal record of state action. By its own terms it will not take effect until October 15. Had it been in force last October, Franklin D. Roosevelt would be in the White House today.

After this year, when the people record their will at the ballot box in November, the men they send to Congress will begin to function within two months. Hitherto, the new representatives have had to twiddle their thumbs for 13 months—until December of the next year—while the country has been given legislation sponsored, framed and put through in part by men who have been specifically repudiated by the voters.

From now on, Congress will meet every year on January 3. The President will take office January 20. The 17-day difference is to give Congress time to canvass and certify election results.

Seout Court of Honor to be Held Monday Evening

The regular meeting of the Scout Court of Honor will be held Monday, January 30, in the Masonic clubroom, it has been announced by H. L. Jones, chairman. At this time those scouts who have qualified for merit badges will be examined.

The troop roll was increased by five last Friday when Walter Stevens, Darwin DeWitt, Jack Lawton, Ervin Smith and Jack Weber all completed their Tenderfoot requirements. This makes seven new members since the first of the year, Guy Hinebaugh and Jack Hinebaugh having become members in the past two or three weeks. John Edward Baird became a first class scout by completing his first aid test, and Howard Smouse was presented with his second class badge.

Four Names Added to Red Cross Roll Call

Four more names were added to the Red Cross Roll Call this week, Mrs. Samuel Cole, county chairman announced recently.

Mrs. Cole states that before this week she had received the sum of $422.00, and the additional enrollment brings the amount to $426.00.

The names added were Miss Inez Bush, Bloomington;, Miss Virginia Kalbaugh, Kempton; Messrs. Ervin S. Smith and Lowell Loomis, Oakland.

Goodwill Industry To Be Open On Saturdays Also

In order that the Goodwill Industry being sponsored by the Oakland Civic Club, might better serve the people of the county, Miss Lottie Loar, president of the club, announced yesterday that the exchange would be open on Saturday afternoons in addition to each Tuesday and Friday afternoons.

The exchange is conducted in the Anderson building, on Alder street, and members of the Civic Club state that at present bedclothing is the most urgent need, especially ticking. Anyone having burlap sacks, flour sacks, clothing or cloth of any kind, is asked to bring it to the Anderson building.

Quite a number of people have been taking ndvantage of the exchange idea, it was stated.

OAKLAND FIREMEN DEFEAT CONEY GOODWILL QUINTET

Get Revenge For One-Point Setback Suffered Early in Season

Oakland Firemen won their eighth game of the season Monday night on the Oakland High gym floor by defeating the Lonaconing Fire Department 29 to 25, to gain revenge for a one-point defeat, 34 to 33, suffered at Lonaconing earlier in the season.

This makes the fifth meeting of the two teams within the past two years. Lonaconing has won four of them, the latter three being one-point margins. Two of the games went into extra periods.

Frank Getty, instructor in Oakland High School, making his debut as referee, called a total of 35 fouls during the contest. Mr. Getty formerly refereed for the Playground Athletic League of Baltimore.

Oakland scored only five of the 20 fouls, while Coney made nine of their 15 free throws.

Coney held a seven-point lead at half time when the count stood 17 to 10, but Oakland forged to the front in the third quarter at 22-20 and held the upper hand the rest of the way.

McComas with seven field goals and four fouls, led the Oakland scoring with 18 points, while R. Eichorn headed the Lonaconing firemen with two field goals and four fouls for a total of 8 points. Thompson scored 7 points, Jim Lee and Skippy May, playing at guard for Oakland, broke up a number of plays which seemed slated to be converted into field goals.

The lineup and summary:

Stolen Car Found Destroyed By Fire At Dodge School House

A West Virginia licensed automobile, which was later identified as a stolen car, was found destroyed by fire alongside the fence enclosing the Dodge School House on Route 37, two or three miles north of Oakland Sunday morning.

The car is owned by Joe Cantor, of Morgantown, and he was unaware of his loss until about two days ago when he went to his garage to warm up the motor. The auto, a Willys-Knight coach, had 1932 license plates No. 174-152. The machine was entirely destroyed.

Assets of County Banks Total More Than Three Millions

Garrett county's total banking resources are $3,137,144.06, or an average of approximately $157 for every man, woman and child in the county, according to the statements of the seven banks of the county which were printed in The Republican two weeks ago.

Total deposits, including both time and demand, were $2,383,403.00, or an average of approximately $119 per capita, based upon the last census of the county showing its population to be 19,958.

MARRIAGE LAW REVISION URGED BY EPISCOPALIANS

Proposed Law Will Be Presented At Meeting of Church Representatives In Baltimore

WOULD PREVENT DIVORCES

Revision of the Maryland marriage laws is proposed in a resolution prepared by the Rev. Donn Frank Fenn, of the Protestant Episcopal church of St. Michael and All Angels, of Baltimore, for presentation at the diocesan convention of the Protestant Episcopal church at Baltimore upon the convening of that body.

The resolutions urges the State legislature to require an interval of at least 72 hours between the application and the issuance of a marriage license. It adds that in case the county judge deems the reason sufficient, th elicense may be issued immediately.

This is the second church in Maryland which has expressed its desire for a revision of the marriage license law. The Presbyterian church at a recent meeting in Baltimore, recommended the same procedure following a report of a committee of which Rev. W. B. Brock, of Oakland, was a member.

The Rev. Dr. Fenn said while such a law as he proposes would affect residents of other states eloping to Maryland, his primary interest is the prevention of hasty marriages of residents of the state.

Would Prevent Divorces

"I feel strongly," said Dr. Fenn, "that many divorces could be prevented if there were less haste in marriage. The Episcopal church, by her canons and the wording of the prayer-book service, exhorts her people to consider carefully all the implications of the married state before seeking her blessing on their unions.

Church Requires Notice

"First, it is required that those who contemplate marriage will give at least three days' notice to the rector in advance of the date of the marriage.

"It is required also that the rector shall instruct both the man and the woman in the duties and privileges of married life. Also, the language of the service for the solemnization of marriage is unequivocal and no one would be permitted to use it who had reservations that were known to the rector.

"But there are hasty marriages, and there is always to be found someone who will perform such ceremonies. It is therefore desirable that a law be passed by the state preventing hasty marriages."

The church convention opened Wednesday at Baltimore.

Just what the proposed change would do for Oakland in the matter of income, if it became a law, is a matter of conjecture. There are an average of 1,200 marriage licenses issued here each year, the majority of them being to couples from West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and other neighboring states. Providing each couple spent on an average of $10 in Oakland for license, fee, food, etc., the present system has been bringing $12,000 each year. Whether the three-day interval would bring in more revenue from the couples who would be required to spend three days here, or whether it would cause many to stay away altogether, is a matter for argument. Those in favor of its passage by the State Legislature are of the opinion that the moral situation would be improved.

Rev. A. J. Torrey, of Elkins, W. Vn., former rector of St. Matthew's P. E. church in Oakland, was here a few hours on Monday when he purchased a lot fronting on Deep Creek Lake where he will spend the summer months with his family.

MAN IS KILLED IN AUTO WRECK NEAR RED HOUSE

Car Struck Tree After Skidding On Curve Between Red House And Aurora, West Va.

GRAFTON WAS OBJECTIVE

Orland Smith, aged 24, was instantly killed, and Harry Clark, 40, was badly injured as their car, westward bound, skidded on a curve and ploughed into a tree at a point on the Northwestern Turnpike between Red House, this county, and Aurora, West Va., the point of the accident being a few hundred yards east of Brookside where there are a number of reverse curves in the highway, the mishap occurring last night a short time after seven o'clock.

The men were enroute to their homes in Grafton, West Va., where Smith was engaged as automobile mechanic and the father of two children, and who was driving the car at the time of the crash.

Smith was instantly killed, his body being wedged between the front seat of the car and the steering post.

Clark was taken to a Grafton hospital following first-aid administered by Dr. Miller, of Aurora, who was summoned immediately after the occurrence. He is suffering with abrasions and cuts about his face and body.

JIG SAW PUZZLE IS FAST COMING INTO ITS OWN

"Once it was Mah Jong, then came the crossword puzzle and now in every spare moment from playing bridge, both nuction and contract, it's the Jig Saw Puzzle," wailed one side of an Oakland family with disgust. "What's coming next?"

Nobody knows just yet what is coming next, but everybody seems certain of the present trend that migh continue until spring weather, or drop into oblivion next week. One never can tell about human nature.

But right now it's the Jig Saw Puzzle, sure enough, as an Oakland store dealer has been selling more than fifty every week. About fifteen weeks ago he sold three. The following week it was five, and the number has been steadily increasing since that time until at present the manufacturer has been swamped with orders from all over the country and the local merchant is lucky if he gets half of his weekly order.

It hasn't yet got to the point of standing in line, but there are never enough puzzles on hand to accommodate the public demand. Some puzzles are as large as an ordinary bridge table and take hours or days to put them together, depending on the amount of concentration and of course the supply of water on the brain.

Oh, well, anything to help the unemployment situation.

FIRE DESTROYS FARM HOME NEAR BITTINGER TUESDAY

During Absence of Family Building With Contents Consumed

Fire, Tuesday afternoon, of undetermined origin, consumed the farm home of Lawrence Buckle and his family located near Bittinger, entailing a loss of considerable proportions. Insurance, said to be carried by a mutual fire insurance company, amounting to $400 was in force.

The family composed of Mr. and Mrs. Buckle, their two children and Mr. Buckle's mother, were all absent from the home at the time of the fire, Mr. Buckle being engaged at work on a saw mill located on the Engle farm and the other members of the household being at the home of a neighbor, consequently everything in the building, including clothing, furniture and provisions, was consumed.

MEN STEAL HEIFER FROM HUTTON FARMER SUNDAY

Animal Slaughtered Before Being Taken From Premises

An unusual theft has been related by Spencer Hardesty, of Hutton.

Mr. Hardesty, a farmer of that community, owned nine yearlings, which were housed in his barn. Sometime Saturday night or Sunday morning marauders entered the building, selected a choice heifer from the herd, took it only a few yards from the barn where they slashed its throat, severed the head and ripped out the entrails before proceeding with a getaway.

Mr. Hardesty said the heifer would dress 200 pounds or more.

Discovering his loss at feeding time Sunday morning he notified Sheriff C. H. Brown, of Preston county, and State Troopers Lyle H. Powell and Sergt. J. W. Wooddell, of Kingwood, and a search was started.

A trail leading from the barnyard was easily followed due to the soft condition of the ground and two men suspected of the theft were soon under arrest. The hide of the animal was found at the entrance of an ahandoned mine near Freeport; one quarter of the heifer was found in the home of Bruin Friend and the balance of the animal was in the home of Dexter Friend, both living at Freeport.

Both the men were taken to the county jail at Kingwood to await a hearing before Justice Whitehair at Terra Alta at a later date.

Later during the day a man named Smith residing in the Freeport community, was arrested by the officers who suspected him of being an accomplice to the crime.

Last spring Hardesty's barn was entered and a calf which he was fattening for market was stolen. Later during the summer Mr. Hardesty lost several lambs from his sheepfold.

Library To Raise Fund At Card Party on February Second

For the purpose of raising funds to carry on the work of the Free Public Library, a card party will be held in the Knights of Pythias Hall on Thursday night, February 2, under the auspices of the library board.

The library is in need of $70 to pay old debts and an additional amount is needed to purchase books and take care of the general expense.

Those who will be unable to attend the card party are urged to make a donation for the support of the organization. The library needs especially children's books and historical books for the use of high school students.

Injured In Car Wreek

James Friend, son of Mr. and Mrs. Willie S. Friend, of Pleasant Valley, was injured Saturday evening while enroute to Oakland when the car in which he was riding was wrecked in some manner. It was thought the accident was caused by a tightening of the brakes of the machine.

Mr. Friend received head and face injuries which were dressed by Dr. H. W. McComas, of Oakland.

Arrested on Liquor Charge

A number of raids were made Monday night and Tuesday by William R. Harvey, agent in charge, and Federal Investigator Willis Lightburne, both of Cumberland.

Gus Pappas, owner of Old Trails Inn, near Grantsville, was charged with sale and possession of liquor. He was arraigned before Magistrate Folk, of Grantsville, and released under $500 bond, pending action of the Garrett County Grand Jury in March.

The other raids were made in Cumberland and vicinity.

SENATOR COAD PLANS FURTHER BUDGET SAVINGS

Tells Assembly He Intends To Cut' State Appropriations $2,000,000

COMMITTEES TO MEET

Annapolis, Jan. 25—The General Assembly today seemed headed toward what has been set down as the real work of this session—drafting and putting into effect a program to ease the burden of direct taxation.

Just before the first meeting of the Senate Finance Committee, Senator J. A. Coad (Dem., St. Mary's) announced that he plans to cut $2,000,000 from the State budget appropriations for 1934 and 1935.

Among some members of the House the feasibility of a moratorium on the training of teachers for the public school system was discussed, and representatives of the tobacco growing districts called on Governor Ritchie and suggested further cuts in the appropriations for public schools in lieu of a tax on tobacco products.

Early Road Tax Action Seen

The Governor and other administration officials indicated they expect early action on their plan to reduce the county levies for roads by maintaining them from the gasoline tax funds and asserted that they believe opposition to having the funds administered by the State Roads Commission had been reduced to a minimum.

Virtually all committees in both the House and Senate, to which bills have been committed, have met to speed action on local and non-fiscal matters and clear the way for consideration of the administration measure or alternative proposals for relief from heavy local taxation.

Senator Coad advised Governor Ritchie that he intended to prevail upon the Finance Committee to reduce by $1,000,000 for each year the budget for the next biennium, which was drafted hy the Governor and submitted for action of the Legislature when it reconvened Tuesday evening. The Governor, he said, told him "it would be fine" if the Senators found some way to reduce the State's expenditures without impairing the necessary functions of government.

To Study Items Minutely

"I intend to go over this budget item for item and I expect to be able to recommend slashes of at least $2,000,000," he said

Senator David G. McIntosh, Jr., (Dem., Baltimore county) and senator Dudley G. Roe (Dem., Queen Anne's) are in accord with Senator Coad's proposal that the Finance Committee find some way to drop the appropriations $2,000,000 below the $62,759,174.69, which would be expended under the Governor's allowances during the next two fiscal years.

It was after a ten-minute speech on the floor of the Senate, in which he urged his colleagues to begin working hard immediately, while sixty-nine days of the session remained for careful considerntion of the program before them, that Senator Coad let it be known that he intended to seek the budget reduction.

Tobacco Tax Protested

A delegation headed by Senator Walter J. Mitchell (Dem., Charles), president of the Senate, called on Governor Ritchie to inform him that they believe a ten percent tax on tobacco would be ruinous to the growers in Southern Maryland, and suggested that snvings in appropriations to the public school system would take the place of revenues derived from this particular commodity tnx.

They suggested, the Governor said later, that the State's contributions to the salaries of school supervisors and assistants, attendance officers, amounting to approximately $185,000 annually, be curtailed.

Silent On Closing Normals

Although discussion of further economies in the public school costs by temporary closing of the four State normal schools did not reach the stage where any member of the Legislature wished to be quoted as favoring such a proposal, several said they intended to seek the figures on the number of graduates of the schools who had found employment after completing the courses in the last two or three years.

The normal schools at Towson, Salisbury, Frostburg, and Bowie during 1934 and 1935 would cost the State a total of $736,072 under the appro-

JESUS AND THE SABBATH

Mark 2:23-3:6.

GOLDEN TEXT—The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath; therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath. Mark 2:27, 28.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Keeping God's Day.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Keeping God's Day.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Use Sunday.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Lord's Day.

I. Jesus Eating With Publicans and Sinners (2:13-17).

1. The call of Levi (v. 14). Levi was a tax gatherer under the Roman government. As Jesus passed by he commanded him to leave his business and follow him.

2. Jesus dining in Levi's house (v. 15). It seems that when Levi found the Saviour, he invited many of his business associates to eat with him. This gave a fine opportunity for Jesus to come into touch with some of these sinners.

3. The perplexed scribes and Pharisees (v. 16). They asked, "How is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners?" The question carried with it the charge that Christ was having fellowship with sinning men.

4. Jesus' reply (v. 17). "They that are whole have no need of the physician: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." The veiled charge of moral carelessness on the part of the Lord could not be denied if Jesus was a mere man. Jesus recognized the moral condition of his associates and declared that he had come as the divine Physician to heal their spiritual maladies. Surely no physician could cure sick folk without coming into contact with them.

II. Jesus and Fasting (2:18-22).

1. The question asked (v. 18). They asked why Christ's disciples did not fast. This objection suggests a lack of seriousness of purpose on the part of the disciples. The fast indicated solemnity and seriousness of purpose. John the Baptist was now in prison, therefore his disciples would naturally mourn and fast for him.

2. Christ's answer (vv. 19-20). "Can the children of the bride chamber fast while the bridegroom is with them?" The joy of Christ's disciples in present congenial companionship prevented their fasting. He declared, however, that the time would come when they would fast.

3. New wine in old bottles (vv. 21, 22). He proceeded to illustrate this by figures of cloth and wine skin. The Lord's purpose was to show the folly of imposing old customs on the new age.

III. Jesus and the Sabbath (2:23-3:6).

1. The disciples plucking ears of corn on the Sabbath (vv. 23-28).

a. Charge made against the disciples (vv. 23, 24). That they had violated the Sabbath law. For this act the Pharisees accused them of lawlessness. The Pharisees had glossed over the Sabbath law with so many regulations that it became a burden.

b. Jesus defends them (vv. 25-28).

(1) He cites a precedent (vv. 25, 26). David, the great king of Israel, had gone into the house of God and eaten the bread which should be eaten only by the priests. The higher law of human need warranted David's breaking the law in this case.

(2) He shows the nature of the Sabbath law (v. 27). The Sabbath was made for man, therefore its right use is to be determined by the good of man.

(3) Jesus is the Lord of the Sabbath (v. 28). It was Jesus who instituted it when creation was finished. Therefore, he had a right to use it as it pleased him for man's good.

2. Jesus healing a man's withered hand on the Sabbath (3:1-6).

a. The place (v. 1). It was in the synagogue, the place of worship.

b. The Pharisees watching (v. 2). The motive which actuated their watching was an evil one.

c. The man an example (v. 3). Jesus wanted the case to be open to all, so he commanded the man to stand forth where all could see him.

d. The question asked (v. 4). "Is it lawful to do good on the Sabbath days, or to do evil, to save life or to kill?" He plainly showed them that to fail to do good, to show works of mercy, to save life, is to be guilty of wrongdoing, even of murder.

e. The man healed (v. 5). Christ healed him by speaking the word.

f. The result (vv. 4, 6). The Pharisees were silenced. They sought how they might put him to death.

The Spirit's Power

If ever we rise again to conscious life, it will be by no native power, but by the operation of the Spirit of God; and, unless the Spirit dwell in us, superstition may have an idol, conscience a law, philosophy a name, but the heart has no God.—F. W. Hedge.

In His Name

I will strengthen them in the Lord; and they shall walk up and down in his name, saith the Lord.—Zech. 10:12.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

To spell such simple words as plough
The writer sometimes wonders hough
The English language sure is tough
No wonder editors grow grough.

Just for instance take a mower
In years of age he was fifty-four
Above the crowd he stood like a tower
Just from eating whole wheat flour.

In all insincerity I ask you nough
If foregoing poem isn't a wough;
But for fear you'll call my blough
I'm willing to holler enough's enough.

Di-di Jim, the office devil, is in an awful stew. He purchased a pair of overalls to keep his clothes clean, and now he is wondering how he can keep his overalls out of the ink.

If the busses in the back lot stay there much longer, we are going to have to charge somebody rent. Or else take a ten-percent cut of the receipts that accumulate in the buggy, which is fast becoming known as the Red Eye Dambling Gen of the Alley cats. A general admission at the entrance might also produce worthwhile revenue.

The firemen's oyster supper is over and Emroy Bolden was enthusiastically declared the Chief Guzzler at the conclusion of the banquet. Although Bill Browning and Ed Shaffer stayed in the running for sometime they couldn't keep pace with "Quack" Bolden. Mayor Stemple, the official counter, said Bolden didn't stop under the hundred mark, while the best Ed Shaffer and Bill Browning could do was 50 or thereabouts. Mike Carney said he would have won if he could have borrowed a set of lowers and uppers. While not belittling a raw or baked oyster in any way, about seven or eight of us were thankful that chickens still grow to be cooked and eaten.

And now I wonder what becomes of oyster shells.

Are You Honest?

In a February magazine the question was asked, "Are You Honest?" and for testing yourself there was a list of questions to answer. Rearranging a few of them and adding a few more, it will now be possible for Garrett countians to determine whether they are honest, or just a bunch of bologna feeders, honest only when convenient.

Try this test first on yourself and then on your friends. If you live through it you will find that honesty in time saves embarrassment and a stitch in time is the best policy, that he who laughs last laughs last, and that people who live in glass houses should pull down their blinds. (Nothing personal in the last remark.)

1. Would you tell your hostess you had a good time if she kept all lights on, had no obscure corners to sit in, and served no refreshments? Ten for no.

2. Would you tell a week-end hostess that the bathtub had a ring around it, or refrain from taking a bath, thereby running the chance that she might see it later and blame it on you? Ten for yes.

3. If Corporal Currie stopped you for going 55, and you knew you were going 60, would you swear you were only going 45? Ten for no.

4. If Turk Shartzer gave you too much change, would you call his attention to the error? Ten for yes. Would you act differently if Cecil Smith, a bank official, made the same mistake? Ten for no.

5. Would you tell your best friend? If so, count this question 10 and tell the mouthwash ads "Pooey."

6. Do you dress in front of a mirror? Fifty for no.

7. Would you go bareheaded in zero weather? If you answer yes, you might be honest, but crazy. Give yourself ten. You've got to get a score some way or other.

8. If you were extremely busy and the boss suggested going fishing, would you keep on working? It's you for a sucker, either way you answer this one. Take five.

9. Do you think you are the berries? 50 for no.

10. Do you like to talk about your operation and enjoy bad health? You're honest if you answer yes, but oh, what a pest. Take one.

11. Would you buy your children toys just so you could play with them yourself? (I knew you'd be just like Archibaldson) Take none.

12. If a dancing partner stepped all over your feet would you say you enjoyed the struggle? Twenty for no.

13. Would you try to ream the banks if they decided to lend money without requiring security? Fifty for no.

14. Would you tell the minister his sermon was punk when it really was? Twenty for yes.

15. Do you clip coupons and get toothpaste, etc., samples? Ten for no.

16. Would you buy a new dress or suit of clothes you liked but didn't really need and have it charged when you didn't have enough to pay the gas bill? Twenty for no.

17. Would you have a guilty conscience if you threw a big party about the time the city was turning your water off for non-payment of your bill? Ten for no.

18. Would you like to have the people pay as much attention to you as you thought was due? Twenty for no.

19. Would you stop reading The Republican if Scoop's Column was taken out? 150 for this question if you answer yes. But I forgot, this is an honest test.

20. Are you in favor of lower taxes? If your answer is no, you are disqualified.

Now add up your score. If you get more than 25 you are fooling yourself. You're not fooling me or your other half. We know you.

I just tried out the test on myself. To be honest with you all, I was afraid to answer them out loud.

Giving myself 150 for question 19 I claim a total of 160 for the entire lot.

Now that this is over I can work out my jig-saw puzzle in peace and quiet. Have you gone crazy too?

ACCOUNT BOOKS KEPT BY FARMERS SHOW EXPENSES

Summary of Five Garrett County Farms Made For 1932

The Extension Service has during the past week completed the summary of account books kept by five Garrett county farmers. These farmers were supplied with record books without cost to them. Two visits were made during the year by the County Agent and a representative from College Park who has done similar work with 150 farmers throughout the State and who is now engaged in summarizing these farm accounts. When this work is completed, a summary report will be written and published explaining the principal facts contained in the farm account books. No information will be given out which will reveal the identity of any one farmer.

This project was started during 1932 because there was every prospect of a continued low price level. To meet that situation there is every need for our farmers to know fully the important facts in their own farm business. These facts can be known only when accurate records are kept. The Extension Service has published a simple farm account book especially prepared for Maryland farmers. Ten of the books were given to farmers in Garrett county and records were kept under the supervision of the Extension Service.

A summary of five farms in Garrett county where records were kept in a simple account book, giving all receipts and expenses for each enterprise on their farms was made. This fairly detailed summary was given to each farmer with an itemized statement of income and expenses of each enterprise on the farm.

The following table shows a brief comparison of the income and expenses on these farms. The names of these men are kept strictly confidential.

A limited number of account books are available at the office of the county agent for use during the year. They will be given free of charge to those who will agree to keep records in them under the supervision of the County Agent.

1932 FAVORED YOUNGEST STATE PEOPLE IN HEALTH

Those Of Middle and Older Age Groups Didn't Fare So Well

That 1932 was especially favorable to the youngest citizens of the State, and to Marylanders in general, but was somewhat less auspicious for those of middle age and in the older age groups, is indicated by a report prepared by the Maryland State Department of Health.

In commenting on this record, Dr. R. H. Riley, Director of the Department of Health, said: "In many instances, 1932 will go down in history as a banner year, so far as the general health conditions are concerned. There was less sickness from communicable diseases—42,621 cases were reported in comparison with 66,284 in 1931; there were fewer deaths at all ages; there were more births reported and a much larger proportion of the babies born during the year survived the perils of infancy than in 1931. Here are the figures: Deaths at all ages, 21,108 in 1932; 21,768 in 1931. Births, 29,155 in 1932; 28,705 in 1931. Deaths under one year, 1,993 in 1932; 2,324 in 1931.

"The death rate for babies—that is, the deaths among children less than a year old to each thousand live births—was the lowest we have ever reached in Maryland. The infant death rates for 1932 in comparison with those for 1931 were as follows: 68.4 per thousand live births for the State, 61.1 for Baltimore City and 75.3 for the counties in 1932; and 81.0 for the State, 74.5 for Baltimore City and 87.2 for the counties, in 1931.

"There were also fewer deaths of mothers in childbirth, in comparison with the totals for other years. The total number of maternal deaths reported in 1932 was 134; the number in 1931 was 180. Six counties—Calvert, Carroll, Howard, Kent, Prince George's and Queen Anne's—had the distinction of having no maternal deaths. The total number of live births reported from these counties was 2,367, of which 1,611 were white and 756 colored.

"There were also fewer deaths in the total from infectious diseases. There were marked decreases in the deaths from typhoid fever, diphtheria and tuberculosis. The death rates—that is the number of deaths from each one of these diseases in each hundred thousand of the population, were the lowest that have been reached in the State. The rates were 3.0 for typhoid; 3.1 for diphtheria and 90.2 for tuberculosis.

"The less favorable side of the picture is shown in the deaths from what are generally called 'degenrative' diseases of middle age and of the older age groups. There were increases in heart disease which was responsible for 4,282 deaths and which was the leading cause of death in the total at all ages; in cancer, which caused 1942 deaths; cerebral hemorrhage, 1726 deaths, and diabetes, to which 430 deaths were attributed. Kidney disease, which belongs to this group, was responsible for 2,316 deaths.

"These five causes were responsible for 10,696 deaths, or more than half of the total deaths reported during the year. Sickness and deaths from these causes may, as a rule, be postponed, provided the often repeated advice in regard to the importance of periodical health examinations and health direction under medical supervision is followed. The large proportion of deaths from these diseases in the general total emphasizes strongly the need for such advice."

HAPPINESS AS A FARM PRODUCT

The nation's farm population, says the Department of Agriculture, is approaching the record-breaking thirty-two million mark established in 1910. Behind the city's dwellers' decision to leave, officials say, is the belief that they can at least get a living on a farm.

There is a reminder, in this ,of other days. It is one of the faults, perhaps, of today's consideration of living problems, that the terms of other years persist in intruding upon today. It is easy for a man to say that things that were thus and so when he was a boy must be true now. And yet—

One such man, the other day, was recalling his boyhood on a farm in Garrett county. The family comprised ten persons, and they lived comfortably and entirely upon the product of that tract—never underfed, never inadequately clothed. That was about all the land did—it supported them. Profits above and beyond the year's needs were hardly thought of. The survival of all in a reasonable degree of happiness—that was their aim.

Odd as it may seem to those who think intensely of amassing a competence that would be a fortune to some, happiness was the major product of that farm. Outwardly, the product was that which the family of ten consumed, and the farm was largely self-sufficient to that purpose. As the children grew up, they went out one by one from the home nest, to become decent, self-respecting citizens, some near, some far from their birthplace.

But they left the farm, the ready critic may say; none among them clung to the soil that had nurtured them. Yes, they left. But the point is that these sons and daughters represent a profit product of that farm on which, in their younger days, the family was content with a merely sustaining livelihood. They were the farm's social dividend, deferred while their ambitions and their energies could be applied.

But these are other times? They are! But what is so far wrong with the philosophy of this Garrett county farm family a generation ago, that it may not be brought down to date? That it can so operate may be guessed from the hope of some who are turning farmward. The terms of yesterday may hold good today, after all.

A HOME PROBLEM

We have now traveled far enough into 1933 to be able to see that there will be no radical change in conditions during the first part of the year at least. Business in the early months of the year is going to be considerably below business in the corresponding months of 1932. Last year, beginning in midsummer, there was a decided pickup. It is to be hoped that there will be a similar pickup this year and that, with no national election to interrupt it, the improvement will be of more permanent character.

One of the phenomena of this stage of the depression is the continuing of the belief in the minds of a great many people that somehow or other our return to prosperity depends on Europe. This belief is of course fostered hy the internationalists who are anxious to have the war debts cancelled and imports into the United States increased.

But these internationalists have as yet heen unable to bring forth any convincing argument to show that debt cancellation will make things easier in the United States. They say that the cancellation of the debts will give the people of Europe more money with which to buy our products. There might be some benefit there if cancellation were really cancellation. But if we let Europe off about these debts the people of the United States will have to pay the debts. So, for every million dollars which European purchasing power might he increased hy cancellation, a million will he taken from the purchasing power of the American people by increased taxation. So assuming that Europe would spend in our country all of the money saved by cancellation, which of course she wouldn't, we would be no better off so far as our commeree is concerned. The European taxpayer would simply be relieved at the expense of the American taxpayer.

Europe, except insofar as she started the World War, did not cause our depression and cannot cure it. The depression was caused by over-expansion and extreme deflation. Now the value of our raw materials is pretty thoroughly deflated and prices of finished goods are rapidly being deflated too as are our wage scales.

What then remains to be done to insure economic convalescence? What remains to be done is to deflate taxes and this can only be done by deflating the expenses of our governments, national, State and local. When this is done, when budgets are balanced in nation, State, city and village, and economic deflation is entirely completed, we will be ready for recovery.

What we must concentrate on now, therefore, is not Europe's problems but our awn problems of the high cost of government.

So many of our financial writers are lined up with the internationalists that it is comforting from time to time to quote from one who can see clearly. For instance, a recent article by R. W. McNeel says, in touching on this phase of our economic situation:

"In 1933 the people of this country or their representatives will have to decide whether they want fewer holes in their clothes and more holes in the street pavements, or the reverse; whether they want more comforts in the home, or whether they prefer to spend their money to support obsolete Washington bureaus, and have their wastebaskets cluttered up with useless reports and statistics; whether they prefer to pay the interest on the mortgaes on their homes or prefer to lose their homes in order that governments may continue expensive frills on our educational system which a previous generation got along without.

The chief solution of our troubles lies in our own back yards, not in France, or England, or Latvia, or in the Kingdom of the Selbs, Croats and Slovenes."

FORTY YEARS AGO

Oakland postoffice was the first fourth-lass postoffice in the United States to receive a complete series of Columhian stamps.

A merry sleighing party from Eglon and Aurora drove to Oakland and were served with dinner at the Commercial Hotel. The party was composed of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Bush, Mr. and Mrs. Julius Scherr and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Lantz and Mr. and Mrs. L. Lantz and daughters.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

After each new President is inducted into office there is usually a period of six months in which the opposition party "lays off" so to speak, and the new executive is given a chance to work out his policies. This period is usually called the incoming chief's "honeymoon." There are indications, however, that President-elect Roosevelt's political honeymoon will not be as extended as many of those which have gone before. There is, of course, a reason. We are now in the midst of a great depression, and a depression doesn't make for an extended honeymoon, either socially or politically.

The reason is that there are so many questions requiring immediate attention and immediate debate that the battle lines will probably be drawn rather quickly. A depression is no respecter of persons. It made the official life of President Hoover a burden and it is likely to do the same thing for Mr. Roosevelt, unless the clouds lift pretty quickly. Then again the Democrats, during the campaign, promised quick relief from the depression. They will be expected to make good, and if they do not do so in a reasonably short time the honeymoon will be over with avengeance. A great many people who voted for Roosevelt and Garner expected the depression to lift the next day after the election and were surprised when there was not at once a tremendous upsurge in the stock market. Then they consoled themselves that things would be all right on March 5. Now they are beginning to wonder whether prosperity will be restored overnight even then.

Of course there was no sensible reason for expecting a business revival immediately after the election. The revival will come sooner or later, but not because of this recent election or any other election. It will come when the processes of deflation are checked or completed, and when the cost of government and the tax rate get down on a level with the cost of labor and commodities.

The problems confronting the new administration are almost too numerous to mention. They are to be found in both the domestic and the international field. In the domestic field they include the balancing of the budget, the reorganization of the government in the interests of economy, the adjudication of the liquor question, and the "rescue" of the farmer. In the international field we might mention the question of debt settlements, of American adherence to the world court of disarmament, Manchuria and our relations with Russia.

There is room for the application of some real statesmanship, political, and economic, in these questions. Some of them are going to be difficult to solve satisfactorily, especially those dealing with liquor, with agriculture and economy. All of them are conducive to the termination of political honeymoons. And in addition, there will be confronting the new administration the question of patronage. The Democrats have been out of power quite awhile, and there are plenty of hungry office seekers, one might say scores of office seekers for each available job. For each man who is satisfied with a position there will be dozens who are disappointed. And political disappointment, too, is conducive to the termination of political honeymoons.

The year 1933, in other words, is fraught with grave and important issues at home and abroad. That Mr. Roosevelt and his new Congress will be able to solve them is the heartfelt wish of every American who has been touched by the depression, and that means 99 out of every 100. But if they are to be solved during the period of political honeymoon a definite program will have to be determined on by Mr. Roosevelt and the Democratic leaders of the new Congress almost immediately. Even then it is going to be a tough job. In the meantime the Republicans are in the minority. Being in the minority has its drawbacks and also its advantages. It is so much easier for a statesman to enjoy himself when he is in the minority.

priations in the present budget. The total cost of operating the schools for this period is set at $958,072, exclusive of the ten percent salary contributions, but $222,000 of this, it is estimated, will be paid into the State Treasury from students' board and and fees.

Governer Opposes Idea

Although there is a large waiting list of qualified teachers who have graduated from the normal schools, Governor Ritchie said he did not believe it would be advisable to close the institutions. An increase from two to three years in the course has resulted in a temporary decrease in the number of graduates, he said. Closing the schools would add to unemployment and seriously affect the communities in which they are located, the Governor added, although he had considered the question, he did not deem it advisable unless absolutely necessary, he said.

It was as a result of a conference with all of the Democratic Senators that Governor Ritchie said he believed opposition to the administration's plan to have the funds allocated to the counties for road maintenance handled by the State Roads Commission had diminished to an appreciable degree.

The Governor and E. Brooke Lee, a members of the State Roads Commission, explained to the Senators that the administration of the gasoline tax funds on the county road maintenance would in no sense mean an absorption by the State of the county road systems. Division of the funds into twenty-three separate units, the Governor told them, would be, in his opinion against efficiency and satisfactory working of the plan to cut the road costs on the county tax bills.

State To Have Final Say

A system can be worked out, the Governor said, whereby the money can be expended under joint supervision of the County Commissioners and the State Roads Commission, with the latter body having the final decision. In all instances, the Senators were informed, road equipment and the personnel of the road organizations of the counties would be utilized by the State Roads Commission, if satisfactory.

Mr. Lee and G. Clinton Uhl, chairman of the roads body, were in the State House today conferring with the members of the Legislature on a system that would be satisfactory to the counties and next Wednesday night the Governor and Mr. Lee will discuss this phase of the administration's general program with members of the House of Delegates.

Sessions of the Senate and the House both were brief today. Aside from measures of purely local nature, the only bills introduced called for revision of the insurance laws, an increase in the penalty for kidnapping and permission for the Board of Estimates of Baltimore to regulate the working hours and wages of laborers on public projects and for the city.

Senator John H. Bouse (Dem., First Baltimore district) sponsored the bill to give the Board of Estimates jurisdiction in setting a five-day week of six hours a day, if it wishes, and place the minimum wage at $2 a day.

Kidnap Penalty Increased

The increase in the penalty for kidnapping was proposed by Senator Creston L. Beauchamp (Rep., Somerset). He would raise the minimum penalty for the crime from twenty to thirty years.

MEDICAL ASSOCIATION OF GARRETT COUNTY MEETS

Opposes Majority Recommendation of National Committee

At a meeting in the Court House, Oakland, on January 24, the association of physicians, dentists and pharmacists of Garrett county considered the recommendations of the national committee on the costs of medical care for the American people, by registering opposition to the majority report, and accepting the minority report.

The majority report of the committee recommended that medical service, both preventive and therapeutic, should be furnished largely by organized groups of physicians, dentists, nurses, pharmacists, and other associated personnel.

Such groups should be organized, preferably around a hospital for rendering complete home, office, and hospital care. The form of organization should encourage the maintenance of high standards and the development or preservation of a personal relation between the patient and physician, and the cost of this service to be borne either by taxation or insurance or both.

The Association unanimously registered its opposition to the recommendations and disapproved of any organized agency formed for the purpose of promoting group medical care. Such a procedure, its members felt, would be economically wasteful, detrimental to the continued and sustained quality of medical care, and an unfair exploitation to the medical profession. They unanimously approved the minority report which was recommended and endorsed by the American Medical, Dental and Pharmaceutical Associations. That report in part is as follows:

1. That government competition in the practice of medicine be discontinued and that its activities be restricted to the care of the indigent and of those patients with diseases which can be cared for only in governmental institutions, and to the promotion of public health.
2. That united attempts be made to restore the general practitioner to the central place in medical practice.
3. That the corporate practice of medicine financed through intermediary agencies, be vigorously and persistently opposed as being economically wasteful, inimical to a continued and sustained high quality of medical care, or unfair exploitation of the medical profession.
4. The development by state or county medical societies of plans for medical care.

The minority group states its reasons for favoring through trial of the county society plan for furnishing complete medical care as follows:

1. It places responsibility for the medical care of the entire community on the organized physicians of the community.
2. It places medical care under the control of the organized profession instead of in the hands of lay corporations, insurance companies and so on.

The Association endorsed as economical and beneficial to the county the services of the County Health Department.

A Reminiscence Concerning the Late Samuel A. Kendall

An unsigned article contributed to the Preston Republican, published at Terra Alta, West Va., relates the following concerning the late Samuel A. Kendall, for many years closely identified with the lumbering industry of this county:

Many West Virginians heard with regret of the untimely passing of the Honorable Samuel A. Kendall, member of Congress from the 24th Pennsylvania Congressional District, who died from a self-inflicted wound in his office in the House of Representatives office building a week ago last Sunday. Congressman Kendall had been grieving over the loss of his wife for several months and his relatives and friends believe that this was the main reason for the act which removed from life a man of sterling qualities.

Ther eare a large number of farmers and former lumbermen in and northeast of Terra Alta, along the Pennsylvania and Maryland line who will remember "Sam" Kendall, of the old Kendall Lumber Company, which years ago, had extensive lumbering operations in Western Maryland and in sections particularly of Preston county. The writer talked with Congressman Kendall some two years ago, on several occasions, and the Congressman recalled at once many residents of the Cranesville section. He remembered Joe Lewis, the late "Tom" Friend, Ezra Wolfe, Marshall Frankhouser, "Gene" Teets, Daniel Browning, the late Charles Miller, Jim Lakin, the late W. H. Glover, T. J. Picking and spoke of Gilmor Hamill, of Oakland. His memory was remarkable. He told of riding horseback one day from Bittinger to Hoyes Run, and then on to Cranesville, and next day to Sang Run. He asked about John and Josiah Summers, old soldiers, and recalled a circuit rider by the name of Albert Engle.

Many of these pioneers are still living, back in the fertile farming lands of Preston county's plateau and will recall Sam Kendall. Before going to Washington to represent his Congressional District, he had served in his own State Legislature. He was a school teacher, lumberman and in Congress served from March 4, 1921, continuously to the time of his death. He was defeated for re-election last November. Congressman Kendall was well known throughout central West Virginia.

Fertilizing Acid Loving Plants

Rhododendrons, mountain laurel and similar plants require acid soils. A knowledge of this fact has become widespread and its use a matter of well established practice. Proper soil reaction, however, is only one factor in the successful cultivation of this group of plants.

If satisfactory growth is to be had, plant food must be more available but the difficulty in using ordinary forms of garden fertlizers is that they may counteract the acidity which these plants need. For this reason, it is preferable to us special materials having an acid reaction. The following formula has proved satisfactory in most cases: Ten pounds of ammonium sulphate, 35 pounds of high grade acid phosphate, 17 pounds of high grade sulphate of potash, 28 pounds of cottonseed meal and 10 pounds of aluminum sulphate.

This mixture may be applied alone at the rate of three and one-half lbs. per one hundred square feet of bed area or a six-inch flower pot full may be mixed with a wheelbarrow load of a suitable compost or pulverized peat moss, and applied to the beds at a depth of about one inch.

Cottonseed meal contains a good supply of nitrogen and phosphoric acid but has little potash. On clay soils this will give satisfactory results when used alone, although well-rotted cow manure treated with aluminum sulphate may be used to promote acidity. Watering-in applications of fertilizer is generally a good practice.

Two applications a year can be made, one in the early spring and the other about the middle of June. Stimulation too late in the year may result in winter injury.

Important to Pea Growers

Maryland growers of peas should give careful consideration in 1933 to the use of fertile soil for growing the crop, planting as early as soil conditions and weather conditions will permit, and following other recommended cultural practices in order to secure the greatest income, according to T. D. Holder, specialist in canning crops for the University of Maryland Extension Service. Mr. Holder points out that since fixed charges vary but little the greatest hope for Maryland growers to increase their income is by increasing their yields per acre.

Of all factors influencing yield probably the most important, according to tests conducted by the University of Maryland, are soil fertility and time of planting. Hence, it is of paramount importance that the grower secure a soil that is all drained, high in organic matter and of good fertility. Tests showed that better growth and higher yields have consistently occurred on soils of high fertility. Second only to soil fertility is time of planting, for this has been shown to have a decided effect on yield.

Within reason, peas should be seeded in this State as early as soil and weather conditions permit if best results are to be obtained. This means that planting should take place somewhere between March 1 and 20; tests have shown that generally the earlier the planting the greater the yield.

In addition to the above practices, others which will be found profitable to follow, according to Mr. Holder, are rotation of crops, fertilization and inoculation. Three to five hundred pounds per acre of a commercial fertilizer of 4-8-5 analysis applied broadcast will prove profitable; on lighter soils the fertilizer may contain more nitrogen. Inoculation of seed should be done just before seeding.

The Sick and Ailing

Former County Treasurer A. L. Lee, whose illness as the result of a stroke of paralysis was noted in The Republican last week, is resting more comfortably at his home adjoining town.

Joy Griffith, former deputy sheriff, who was seriously injury some time ago by the discharge of a quantity of dynamite and taken to a Cumberland hospital for treatment, was returned to his home near town yesterday afternoon. Mr. Griffith suffered the loss of one eye and his arm was fractured in two places as a result of the explosion. His condition today is said to be satisfactory.

RECLAMATION IN REVERSE

FORESTS AND PASTURES SUGGESTED AS AIDS TO AGRICULTURE

By WAYNE GARD, in the Baltimore Sunday Sun, Jan. 22, 1933.

In the period which opened with the Spanish War and closed with the World War people listened to a great amount of eloquence about land reclamation. Homesteading, which began in 1862, had just about run its course; the desirable free farm land was almost exhausted. But irrigation—that was the new key to agricultural and even national prosperity. The desert would be made to "blossom as the rose," and two stalks of grain would be made to grow where only one had grown before.

Benevolent Uncle Sam already had begun to respond to the plea for drainage and irrigation ditches, but in this period he financed new digging in almost every desert or eraw-fish swamp that had two or three squatter residents who knew how to pull Congressional strings. As a result of this policy, the Federal Government has reclaimed from the deserts, by irrigation, lands which together form an area larger than South Carolina. Moreover, it has reclaimed from swamps, by drainage, land equal in area to the State of Nevada.

This work of reclamation has had obvious benefits, and few will take exception to the wisdom of its sponsors. But today conditions which determine land and agricultural policies are far different from those which prevailed at the turn of the century. At present, some agricultural authorities believe, the need is not to bring more land under cultivation but to remove from cultivation a large amount of land which is now being farmed at a loss and for the products of which there is no market demand.

If the American farm surplus could be sold profitably abroad our overexpansion in agriculture might be a blessing instead of a blight. But in recent years, in the faee of increased production here, our agricultural exports have been falling off. European countries have been increaseing their own farm production and have been buying from other countries rather than from us. As a result, American growers lately have had to sell their wheat at from 20 to 30 eents a bushel and their corn at from 4 to 8 eents, the price varying with the grade of the grain and the distanee from the market. In most cases such prices are so far below the cost of production that they mean ruin to thousands of farmers.

It would be unfair, of course, to hold reclamation responsible for the current overproduction in agriculture. The yield from land reclaimed by the Federal Government is slightly less than one per cent of the total. Yet even a surplus of one per cent may have a severely depressing effect upon prices In view of the present agricultural overproduction and of the failure of many holders of irrigated land to pay water fees due the Government, the continuation of reclamation has been attacked as absurd. But pork-barrel demands from the Western states seem to prevail unless unusual pressure is used upon Congress and upon the Department of the Interior by those opposed to further reclamation.

The present situation, in the view of many students of agrocultural problems, calls, first, for a definite termination of homesteading; second, for a shelving of further reclamation plans until an increase in population or a change in market conditions warrants the cultivation of more land, and, third, for the discouragement of hungry land-seekers from settling on unprofitable land. This last step can be furthered by providing an unbiased information service. In the past rosy pictures painted by chambers of commerce, railway settlement bureaus and State immigration agencies have often resulted in agricultural overexpansio nand economic tragedy.

After these negative actions have been taken, it is argued, it will be advisable to take positive steps toward removing from cultivation—temporarily, at least—from ten to fifteen per cent of the land now being farmed. This submarginal land can be used for grazing, for forest culture, for recreational parks, for hunting preserves, or for a combination of several purposes.

The overproduction of various grains results largely from the plowing up of pastures and the cutting of forests to increase the land under cultivation. Between 1890 and 1920 pasture land was decreased by 81,000,000 acres. Crop land was added to during this period at the rate of about 4,500,000 acres a year. Two-thirds of this increase came from pasture land, the remainder from timber land.

The individual farmer cannot be blamed for wanting to produce big crops. During the World War he was asked to produce as much as he could as a matter of patriotism. More recently, with prices depressed, he has had to produce a maximum of quantity in order to pay his taxes or his rent. To ask him to plow under every third row—as the Farm Board once asked the cotton growers to do—is considered as unreasonable as to ask the factory owner or manager to smash every third machine in his plant or to request the landlord to burn—without insurance—every third house he owns.

Yet this problem of the utilization of submarginal farm land is becoming more pressing every year. In nearly every State farms are being abandoned in large numbers and others are being surrendered for tax delinquency. In Mississippi alone 60,000 farms were expropriated for non-payment of taxes in the first three-quarters of 1932. Thus the States are coming into possession of land which, nationally, runs into millions of acres.

The States cannot derive taxes from this land, nor can they sell it in the present demoralized market. With corn rotting on the stalks and fruit decaying under the trees for want of buyers, no one is willing to spend money on a farm which has not given its previous owner even enough income to cover the taxes. And in many communities social disapproval prevents anyone except the debtor from bidding at a farm tax sale.

Since the States are being saddled with these white elephant farms—which in many instances cannot be returned to private hands even as gifts—the next step suggested is to formulate a land policy that will put this and perhaps other submarginal farm land to more profitable use. The problem is to utilize this land without allowing its return to cultivation, since its use for crops under present conditions would not only be unprofitable to the operator but would injure the farmers of more fertile land by adding to the surplus and thus depressing prices. And, it is pointed out, the problem must be solved without adding to the already heavy burden of the taxpayers.

The current shortage of grazing and forest lands deserves consideration in connection with this problem. The number of cattle in the United States has been increasing since the 90s, and we are still importing wool Our pasturage for dairy cows is inadequate. Moreover, some of the grazing lands of the public domain are being abused by overgrazing, which is leading to an alarming degree of erosion.

Our shortage of forests is even more serious. We are cutting trees four times as fast as we grow them, and the nation is threatened with a timber famine within a generation unless a more vigorous policy for reforestation is adopted. Many of the present abandoned or tax-delinquent farms are suitable for growing timber, but timber grows too slowly to attract private capital for such investment, and in some States taxes virtually prohibit private forest culture.

The State of New York already has undertaken an ambitious program of reforestation. In 1931 the voters of that State ratified a constitutional amendment which called for the appropriation of $19,000,000, spread over a period of eleven years, beginning in 1932. This money will be used to buy and plant forests of more than 1,000,000 acres in designated counties. The areas acquired will be abandoned farm lands classified as submarginal and will account for about one-fourth of the deserted farms in the State.

This enterprise is expected eventually to pay its way through the sale of fence posts, poles, cross-ties, lumber and pulpwood. At present New York produces scarcely more than one-thirtieth of the lumber it consumes, and spends $40,000,000 a year in freight charges to bring in lumber from other States and from Canada.

In other states, especially in the Northeastern part of the country, the reforestation movement is gaining momentum. State forests, game refuges, county forests and state and county parks are being established. New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Michigan have undertaken extensive tree planting. The Quaker State has been using prison labor to set out trees on public lands, and in the West California is enlarging her system of State parks.

As a rule, the ends of land utilization dovetail closely with those of conservation and of providing grounds for recration. Land acquired for parks value for agriculture. Thus, in Iowa and game refuges usually has little a recently adopted twenty-five-year conservation plan will do more than serve its principal purpose of conserving natural resources and adding to the public playgrounds. It will take out—or keep out—of cultivation an appreciable amount of submarginal land. This program is being financed without a single penny of additional taxation.

The Federal Government can also assist in a long-range program of land utilization, and, argue many of the agricultural experts, it can do so without additional taxation if reclamation activities are halted. In recent years the reclamation fund handled by the Department of the Interior has had an annual income of about $10,000,000. Of this fund about 26 per cent comes from a share of 52½ per cent of the royalties derived under the oil-leasing act, 7 per cent from land sales and power revenues and the remaining 67 per cent from repayments by water users of the cost of their irrigation works.

If, for the immediate future, this fund could be diverted to a use almost opposite to that for which it was intended, runs the argument, it might do a great deal more good for agriculture. Conceivably it might be used in acquiring submarginal land for additions to the national forests and to the public grazing ranges. A part might also be used in making soil surveys in cooperation with the individual States and for the purpose of land classification. Some work already is being done in this line, but the present efforts are fagmentary.

A satisfactory land classification would, of course, be something more than a perfunctory blacklisting of land which under present conditions will grow profitably the prevailing crops of the region. The survey would recommend, in many instances, the substitution of a crop for which the market demand was stronger. Some wheat land, for instance, might more profitably be planted in flax and some corn land might pay better in apples or grapes. And some of the blacklisted land eventually might even be found useful for something other than forestry or grazing, since new varieties of grains and fruits, adapted to special soil and climatic conditions, are being evolved.

The need of a policy of scientific land utilization has been recognized by agricultural economists ever since the farm deflation which came soon after the World War. The adoption of such a policy was looked upon as imperative by the National Agricultural Conference of 1922 and later by the Business Men's Commission on Agriculture, whose report was published jointly by the National Conference Board and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States in 1927.

In 1931 a conference on land utilization, attended by 357 economists, resolved "that the Reclamation Service confine its efforts to finishing projects already started and to rehabilitating deficient water rights on lands now cultivated and occupied, but that new lands or projects neither be undertaken through irrigation nor drainage until justified by agricultural needs of the nation." This conference also created fact-finding and legislative committees to further the classification and proper utilization of the lands.

Fortunately, the problem of land utilization is not complicated by partisan politics, since scientific utilization has been advocated by the leaders of both major parties. The Republican platform of 1932 contained this plank, of which President Hoover specifically approved in his Des Moines speech.

The views of the President-elect on land utilization are reforestation are well known. In his campaign speech in Atlanta, Governor Roosevelt declared that "in most of the States east of the Mississippi it will undoubtedly be determined that somewhere between ten and twenty per cent of existing farm acreage now used for agricultural purposes should be abandoned as sueh and converted into use for tree crops."

During the two decades beginning in 1909, the cultivated area of the nation was added to by 35,000,000 acres. If this land—or land of approximately the same total area—could now be diverted to other use, argue the agricultural economists, a long step would thus be taken toward the rehabilitation of American agriculture. Such diversion would mean that some people now engaged in farming would have to look for other occupations—but they are going to have to do that in any case. Without scientific planning for the use of land, an even larger number of families will be driven from the farmsteads by the relentless force of cotton, grain and livestock prices that are definitely below the cost of production. The choice is between judicious pruning and economic decay.

Fable of the Erstwhile Buddies

By GEORGE ADE

(©, Bell Syndicate.)—WNU Service.

IT HAPPENED that an antique Fluff was squatted in the office of the Occidental Hotel at Weaver Junction. He was regarding Main Street with a Expression which was wistful rather than Enthusiastic. He was accosted by a Traveling Salesman out of St. Louis who wanted to know if Number Five stopped, except on Signal, if there was a Diner attached and whether or not it made the connection at Gosport. To which the Elderly Party replied that he was not an Information Desk, although he felt himself rather intrigued by any Discussion relative to making a quick getaway from Weaver Junction.

"Stranger in these Parts" queried the Drummer, in that tactful and Ingratiating manner which is one of the chief assets of those who carry heavy Grips and eat at Cafeterias.

"Yes and no," was the reply. "I was born in this Dump and Time was when I knew every Man, Horse and Dog within the Corporate Limits by his First Name. The Bradley House, this side of the Crick, was Buckingham Palace and the Methodist church was St. Peter's. The Sun rose just beyond Gardner's Mill and set about a mile West of Buckeye Ridge. I return after a lapse of 40 Years, a Combination of Rip Van Winkle, Enoch Arden and the Prodigal Son. No matter how much you strain your Eyes, you will not discover any Triumphal Arches along Main Street.

The Dope Goes Wrong.

"The Members of the Silver Cornet Band were so busy getting Market Reports over the Radio that I was met at the Depot by no one except the Town Marshal and two Taxis. I visited the terrible Birthplace to pluck an old-fashioned Flower and stand, bareheaded, in the Presence of ghostly memories and a big-eyed Dotty, who looked as if she had stepped out of a Broadway Revue, came from the House and told me to beat it as she was all dated up, and, what's more, didn't have any Time for a steam-heated Papa. I expected to find a Memorial Tablet and, instead, I was handed the Ice Pitcher. I, who should have been given the Freedom of the City, am under Suspicion at this moment as a visiting Bootlegger who is trying to undermine the Local Dealers who make their Own."

"So you have been unable to locate any of your old Pals?"

"Too many. All of them are surprised to see me and one was glad. He remembered that I had borrowed Two Dollars from him in a Poker Game in 1888. Perhaps I should explain that any one looking at me Today in my Gray Business Suit and neat Fedora would little suspect that when Grover Cleveland first ran for President I wore a Sombrero, carried a Pair of Knuckles and played the Guitar every Evening in the Eagle Saloon, owned by Herman Smoltz.

"When I left here, with a Circus there was no Dissenting Voice from the town-wide Opinion that I would end up in some large Institution where men with Springfield Rifles, would see to it that no one interrupted me while I was making Chairs. Strangely enough, after I escaped from the Immediate Supervision of my pious Relatives I felt an overwhelming and uncontrollable Desire to lead a snow-white and blameless Existence. For several Decades I refrained from visiting the Old Home Town on account of the Statute of Limitations and because no one asked me to come back. For many Years I have been honored and successful in a City far away.

I supposed, of course, that the Folks here were keeping Tabs on me and were proud to claim me and were tickled to learn that I had been plucked as a Brand from the Burning. I now learn that they have heard of me and my Achievements but not one of them has suspected, all during these Years, that the Great and good Vernon J. Kirkpatrick could possibly be the "Verne" who was shot at twice by a Constable the Night he skipped out. Even now they are skeptical. I should have brought Measurements and Finger Prints with me. I have a Birth-Mark which will prove all of my Claims, but, it is too much Trouble to show it. No use Talking, when a Small Town makes up its Collective Mind on any Proposition it doesn't wish to be disturbed in the Belief."

Successful Bad Eggs.

"Too bad that the Wanderer's Return has been such a Flop," suggested the sympathetic Traveling Salesman.

"I have been well repaid," said the Old-Timer. "I am taking away with me at least Two Tons of Food for Reflection. In digging up Answers to that time-honored Inquiry, 'Where are the Friends of Yesterday?' I have acquired some rare Dope. For instance, what do you suppose became of George Piffengirth, who memorized One Thousand Verses of Scripture?"

"Probably he is occupying the Prison Cell meant for you?"

"No—worse than that. He is Lecturer on a rubber-neck sight-seeing Auto Bus in the wicked Metropolis. He made $30,000 on a patent Mouse-Trap and lost it all playing the Ponies. He has had three Wives, all Blonds. All during our early Youth we were told to watch George and do whatever he did. It was thought that he would be a Bishop sooner or later. He had a Sister named Minerva who wouldn't speak to me when we were in High School because I used Tobacco. She is now a Missionary in China. I had to wait a long Time for my revenge, but I got it."

"I suppose most of the Tough Customers turned out to be Good Citizens."

"No, not Good, merely Successful. As I look back at the prehistoric Period of Paper Collars and the Hair worn in Nets, it seems evident that the only Young People who developed robust Vices were those who had both Enterprise and Ambition. All of the Refrainers were Virtuous in a negative sort of Way but maybe it was because they lacked the Pep to get out and shatter a lot of Rules and Regulations.

"I remember that 'Punk' Beasley was supposed to be ornery and worthless but it did learn to walk the Slack Rope after all the rest of us has tried, and nearly broke our Necks, and now he is Manager of a Factory because he knows how to handle the Unions. Still unpopular but getting Results. The meanest Pup in Town, next to Me, was 'Red' Hannegan. He was the Horrible Example of the Residence District.

"As soon as 'Red' learned of a Habit which was frowned upon by the Godly Element he went and cultivated that Habit, intensively and otherwise, as a Protest against the Moral Code as translated here in Weaver Junction. He is now President of an Inter-Urban Street Railway Company and Exalted Ruler of the Elks. What is more, he has not changed any of his Habits. He simply moved them to a Neighborhood, in which they would find more congenial Environment. Did you ever hear of the Hooper Shock-Absorber!"

"Who hasn't?"

The Gyper's Litany.

"Well, 'Skinny' Hooper was born and raised right here at this Whistling Post and, in addition to having Weak Eyes, was supposed to carry nothing but a large Open Space under the Straw Hat. Now he has a House Boat in Florida and four Jap Servants. He hasn't any more Gumption than he had when he failed to get his Diploma in the High School. It seems that one Day he just happened to think of a Shock Absorber and since then he hasn't done Anything except collect Royalties and read Time-Tables. On the Other Hand, 'Chad' Wheeler, who had an Intellect so luminous that you could see it in the Dark, went out West and I'll bet you couldn't guess what he's doing now."

"Driving a Truck?"

"No, that Job would involve the Physical Exertion of Crawling up on the High seat, starting the Engine and twisting the Wheel. 'Chad' is too smart to get hooked up with any Employment which might induce Perspiration or strain any of his pet Muscles. No sir. I learned today that 'Chad,' whose bulging Brain marked him as a logical Candidate for Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, is now Night Watchman at a Movie Studio in Hollywood.

"That might sound like the Zero of Occupation for a Mental Colossus but I have no Doubt that 'Chad' has the Feeling that he and Bill Hays practically control the Industry. The Playmate that I really wanted to find out about has disappeared. His name was 'Stuttering' Johnson and he was so Conscientious that he wouldn't go along with us to steal Melons. We were just like a couple of Brothers. I liked him, even if he did give me a lot of Good Advice I couldn't use. If I'd listen to old 'Stuttering' I'd have been snow-white. He had an Impediment in his Speech but his Heart was Pure Gold. I sure would like to get some Track of him."

"You say he Disappeared?" asked the Drummer.

"He jumped his Bail Bond at Little Rock, Ark., about six years ago, after he'd been indicted for promoting a queer Oil Company. I'd certainly like to find the Old Boy. He was nearer me than any of my own kin. Furthermore, from what I learn of his Success in floating that Oil Stock, I think I could use him in a big Scheme that I'm cooking up to give a Radio Set to every Sucker who buys One Thousand Dollars worth of Stock in the Company that makes the Sets. The Lawyers tell me it's a Safe Bet. The real Business Success is the Guy who can turn a Sharp Corner without stubbing his Toe. And as long as the Grand Jury can't get anything on you, that makes you Snow-White."

"I am more than ever surprised that the Folks here never gave you that Memorial Tablet," said the Commercial Traveler.

"They are all dead standing up," said the disowned Native Son. "If they had made a Fuss over me I'd have put a Pipe Organ in the Church from which I was expelled. As it is, I will spend the Money for Silk underwear."

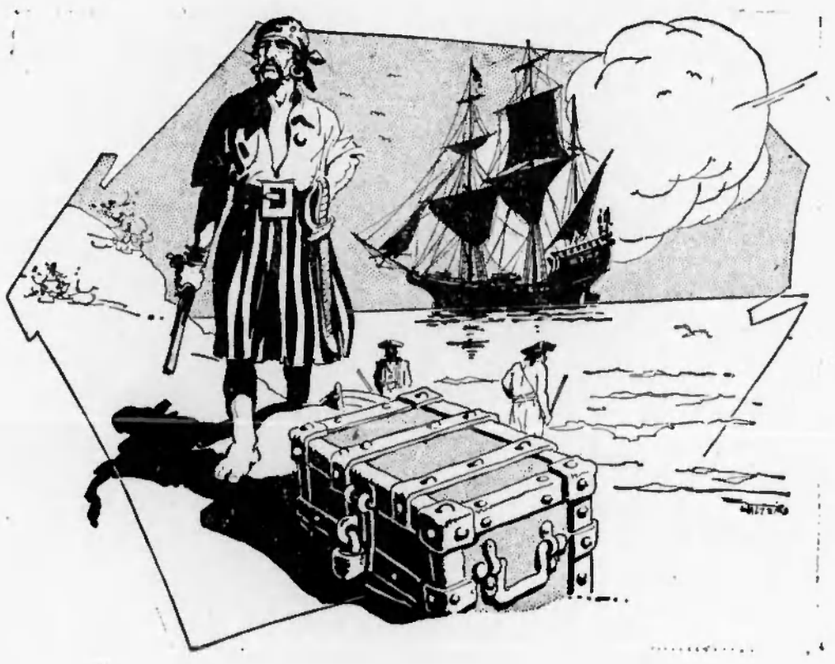
England's Oldest Oak

Cowthorpe oak is said to be the oldest in England. Records say that it is about 1,600 years of age. Taking root near the great Roman road, some three miles from Wetherby, it became one of the mightiest oaks in England. On one occasion 100 children gathered in its hollow trunk. In 1842 the tree was estimated to contain 74 tons of timber, the trunk was 60 feet in circumference, it was 43 feet high, and its main branch 50 feet 6 inches long. But where once (it is said) boughs spread over half an acre, there remain only its huge gaunt limbs. Every spring, however, green leaves still appear among the topmost branches, and workmen are doing what they can to keep the giant alive for a few more years.

There's Buried Treasure

IN

Garrett County



The merchants who advertise consistently are finding it.

The people who take advantage of advertised products are discovering it.

It's a case of mutual satisfaction.

BUT FIRST

People must be told where and what the treasure is.

Mr. Business Man

You know that there is money in Garrett county, and that people will part with their treasures in exchange for your merchandise.

But they don't know what treasures are in your store. If you don't let people know what you have, they'll take it for granted you don't have it.

GIVE YOURSELF A FAIR CHANCE

Advertising is an investment without the danger of a stock market slump. It always pays big dividends when done consistently and intelligently.

Elvira's Duty

By ROSE MEREDITH

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

"OF COURSE you're mighty contented, and I guess happy, down there in Forbestown, Elvira—I hear there's a young man who is sweet on you, too—but if it ain't your plain duty to go out to your brother Joe, then, I'm all wrong!"

Elvira Peck stared at her aunt amazedly. "Of course Joe has Anna—" she was beginning, when Aunt Sarah's shocked face stilled her. "What is it, Auntie—what has happened to Joe—I haven't heard a word."

"Don't you know that Annie died last week?" demanded Mrs. Smith. "I sent you a letter."

Elvira sank into a chair. "I never heard a word—please tell me—poor, poor old Joe—of course I will go out to him!" she said.

"That sounds more like you, Elvira! I couldn't understand why you didn't come right home as soon as you got my letter—instead of taking that trip to Forbes City with the other school teachers—I just said, 'It ain't a bit like Elvira Peck.'"

"But I never received your letter," protested the girl.

Aunt Sarah stared at her niece and then suddenly began to paw over the contents of the desk before which she sat. At last she brought out an addressed and stamped letter.

"Elvira Peck—I am ashamed of myself, so I am—Here's the very letter I wrote to you when the telegram came—and one I wrote to your cousin Eva Lane at the same time. I wrote to all the other cousins, too, but I was so excited when I gave the letters to your Uncle Oscar to mail that I didn't get 'em all in! To think of your going off and having a good time and your poor brother in such deep grief!"

So it happened that the very next day, Elvira was on her way West, her heart sore for poor Joe, all alone in his trouble and just a little sore on her own account, for there was a man right in Forbestown who had paid much attention to Elvira, and who had hinted that he would never marry any other girl. They were not engaged, but she could not help but know that Daniel Rush was hovering around the point of an avowal of his love. Elvira liked him a lot—but somehow there was always a little distrust of his weakness of character, that was a warning when she was tempted to encourage Daniel.

At the small Wyoming station, Joe Peck came to meet her in a large automobile. He appeared sad, but being of a strong, resolute nature, he was bearing his loss well. He smiled when Elvira told him about the mislaid letter and patted her shoulder when she cried and told him of her grief over the loss of her sister-in-law. Altogether, he was much like the Joe of old.

"Your coming is a wonderful blessing to me, Ellie," he told her that night. "Of course if we had had any children it would be different—but it's just dumb lonely here at night."

Elvira could see that, and did everything in her power to lighten her brother's burden, and to make the big ranch house bright and cheerful during the long evenings. She slipped into the life of the ranch, managing the willing old Chinese cook with wonderful diplomacy. The cowboys all worshiped her.

But days and weeks passed, and she never had a word from Daniel Rush.

And then, one evening, there came a knock at the door, and Joe admitted a very tall young man, Billy Brainerd, a big handsome young man, with honest blue eyes and a humorous mouth.

"I'm mighty glad that you are here, Miss Peck," he told Elvira. "I am sure that you and my sister will hit it off splendidly—and we four can have a game of cards every night if we want to."

"How jolly," cried Elvira, "and is your place very near, Mr. Brainerd?"

"Oh, no, only about ten miles," he said easily. "Jean and I have been away to Colorado, and did not hear of the sad news that our friend Joe had suffered a great loss, until tonight. So I just come over and Jean sent her love and sympathy. Jove, if she had known that you were here, Miss Peck, she would have come along, too."

That was the beginning of a very happy time for Elvira Peck and her brother Joe, even though his loss was new and the wound was raw. The Brainerds were good friends, and the quiet friendliness of the brother and sister made a perfect summer for Elvira and did much to assuage Joe's own trouble.

And then one day there came a letter from Aunt Sarah with a bit of keenly interesting information. "You remember that young fellow in Forbestown, who used to hean you around, Elvira? Well, he's suddenly ran off and married Carrie Peters—you remember the milliner's daughter? No particular reason why they shouldn't have had a real wedding at home—but folks say he's real flighty that way."

Elvira smiled when she read that letter, and the very next day she wrote a long letter to her aunt, telling her the delightful news of her own engagement to Billy Brainerd, and she hinted that in June there would be another announcement from Joe, who had found a measure of happiness in his sincere love for Jean Brainerd. So, she wrote, "You can see that my coming out here to do my duty by dear old Joe, has proved to be lifelong happiness for both of us."

Mountain Lake Institute News

Garrett county people are especially invited to attend the programs of the annual Farm and Home Week held at the College of Agriculture at Morgantown January 30 to February 5. It will be of interest to know that Miss Sara B. Huff, in charge of music at Mountain Lake Institute, will be in charge of the musical programs which will make up a large part of the week's activities.

On Monday night there will be a Seth Parker program and those who hold fond memories of the old singing schools will find this of interest. On Thursday evening will be the annual dinner at the hotel, at which time Miss Huff has arranged with her Scotch kilties to be present and give their Scotch dances and the music of the bag pipes.

A special invitation is extended to the octogenarians and Miss Huff is very anxious that all her eighty year old friends who can attend should send in their names to Mountain Lake Institute at once.

It is hoped that a large number of the friends of Mountain Lake Institute will attend and participate in these very interesting programs as well as the lectures and demonstrations which will be held at other hours each day.

In the Near Future They Will Come

The sunny skies and hazy mornings remind us that it won't be many moons until many of our friends and neighbors will be coming hence from thither. There will be the Carrs, Mrs. Busselle, Miss Finnell, Mrs. Hutchinson, Jack Grimes and William Grimes and their families, Fred. Fleming, Mac Clayton, Mrs. Frank Morgan and many other lovers of the Park whom we are always glad to welcome home.

Petty Thieving in the Park

We have been criticized for giving publicity to the petty thieving about the Park this winter. Well, of course there is generally a difference of opinion as to the best method to be pursued in such matters. But we seemed to be quiescent and apparently looked on the breaking and entering of vacant houses as just a sign of the times in which we are now living. But this is not true, and this is not the only community in which petty crime seems to be on the increase. But few towns have escaped. We have no excuse to offer or apologies to make for reporting news items of this kind. Unless the citizens are reminded that it is their duty to report all suspicious characters and circumstances to the proper authorities, that class who are simply taking advantage of hard times and using the depression as an excuse for stealing, will come to believe that neither the authorities nor the citizens give a hang what they do.

Since our last column was printed the stable of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Oswell was entered and two trunks rifled and what contents were not taken were scattered about the place and unmentionable indecencies committed.

We understand the Mountain Lake Hotel was also entered, but we are not advised whether anything of value was taken therefrom.

While the Park is a difficult place to police, yet we predict the guilty will be soon apprehended.

Church Half Century Anniversary

The program for the golden anniversary of Methodism in Mountain Lake Park appears at the head of this column. We were disappointed in not being able to present a history of the founding of the church this week.

Charles Harvey was too foxy to give us a preview of the manuscript for the reason that he believed that if the readers saw it here one of the incentives for attending the celebration would be lacking. So we will have to be contented with presenting it after the event. But at that, if the number who fail to attend service on Sundays is any criterion, it will be news even then. To make sure, you had best get it first-handed by being present in person.

Garden Clubs

While the following item concerns activities in another State, yet it is interesting here. We refer to the Garden Clubs of Monongalia county, W. Va., in charge of Mr. Bushrod (Jack) Grimes.

These gardens, a report of which we have received, were initiated by the Rehabilitation Committee of the County Welfare Board in order to emphasize the importance, in times like the present (and in fact in any times) of subsistence gardens to help solve the food problem.

This comprehensive report in regard to this important undertaking can receive but inadequate mention here. Very briefly, however, aside from giving credit to Mr. Grimes for the success of the undertaking, it shows that during the 1932 season not only did the gardens produce provender during the summer months, but a total of more than 64,000 quarts of vegetables were canned, nearly 6000 bushels stored and more than 7000 pounds dried. In addition nearly 6000 quarts of fruits were canned, 106 quarts dreid and 3500 quarts of jelly made. Six hundred families participated. Then there were 1500 gallons of butters made, 3200 gallons of kraut and 4000 gallons of miscellaneous pickles were put up.

This certainly helped to a great extent in solving the food problem in the sections of the county covered and is certainly worthy of imitation

Homemakers' Column

Much of the attractiveness of liver as it comes to the table depends upon the method of cooking. It depends also upon the tenderness and freshness of the liver. The age of the animal is a factor there.

The usual method of cooking liver is to broil or saute it. Cookery experts point out, however, that liver may very easily be overdone by cooking a little too long or by using too much heat. Fresh and tender liver should be cooked only long enough to take away the red color. Other liver, with a less delicate flavor and texture, tastes better if scalded first, although some food value is then sacrificed.

Another way to utilize the cheaper kinds of liver, like the cheaper cuts of meat of any kind, is to chop or grind and combine it with other foods. Thus, besides such popular dishes as broiled liver and bacon, liver and onions, liver and milk gravy, braised liver, or baked liver, all of these utilizing slices, there are creamed liver, liver hash, liver and rice loaf and liver croquettes, which call for chopped or ground liver Then there are scalloped liver and potatoes, or scalloped liver and whole wheat. Liver salad may be made of chopped liver, raw cabbage and onions.

Braised liver in tomatoes is still another appetizing dish. For this, dip the liver in flour, brown it in fat, then cover it with tomatoes which have been slightly thickened, season it with onion, green pepper and salt, and cook slowly, covered, for 15 or 20 minutes.

Liver is an excellent food for children, say the nutrition specialists. Therefore, when fowls of any kind are on the family bill of fore, let the children have the livers. Liver makes a good sandwich filling, too, for the school lunch box. The paste may be made by mixing chopped or ground liver with chopped pickle, chopped cabbage, chili sauce or other seasonings.

Scalloped Liver and Whole Wheat

Four thin slices bacon or salt pork, 1 onion, sliced; salt, pepper, flour, ½ pound liver, 2 cups cooked whole wheat, ½ cup hot water. Fry the bacon or salt pork until crisp, remove it, brown the onion in the fat, and push to one side. Salt, pepper and lightly flour the liver and fry it slowly in the fat until the red color disappears, turning it frequently. Cut up the liver and bacon or salt pork, mix with the onion and add more salt if necessary. Put the wheat and liver in a greased baking dish in alternate layers. Pour the water around the sides of the dish, cover and bake for about 30 minutes. Serve from the dish.

Scalloped Liver and Potatoes

One pound liver, sliced thin or chopped, salt, pepper, flour, 2 tablespoons bacon fat, 1 quart thinly sliced raw potatoes, 1 small onion, chopped; 1½ cups milk. Salt and flour the liver and brown lightly in the bacon fat. Put the potatoes and liver in alternate layers in a greased baking dish, with potatoes on the top and bottom. Add salt and pepper to season the potatoes. Pour on the milk, cover, and bake for one hour in a moderate oven or until the potatoes are tender. Toward the last remove the cover and allow the potatoes to brown on top.

Liver and Rice Loaf

One-half cup rice, 4 cups boiling water, 1 pound sliced liver, 2 tablespoons fat, 1 small onion, chopped fine; 1 cup chopped celery or cabbage, ½ cup chopped parsley, 2 tablespoons flour, 1 cup tomatoes, canned or fresh; 2 teaspoons salt. Cook the rice until tender in boiling water and do not drain, but let the rice absorb the water so it will be a binder for the loaf. Sprinkle the liver with salt and flour, and cook in the fat for about 5 minutes. Remove the liver and grind or chop it very fine. Cook the onion, celery and parsley in the drippings for a few minutes, add the flour and tomatoes and stir briskly until thickened. Then mix all the ingredients until thoroughly blended and bake for about thirty minutes in a moderate oven.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

Another word frequently met with as we study Jewish antiquities, is Talmud. This, like Targum, is a Chaldee word, and means "instruction." The Talmud contains the body of fundamental Jewish laws, comprehending the laws of Moses, the expositions and amplifications of the rabbins, thereon and a collection of traditions, and the name also applies to the book or books containing them. The Talmud is, indeed, the fundamental code of the Jewish civil and canonical law, and comprises the Mishna, or text of the law, and the Gemara or commentary upon it. The Mishna is really the "Oral" Post Mosaic Code, reduced to writing, and finally redated in the form in which we now possess it.

The great task of sifting and editing the material brought together in the Mishna was undertaken by the Patriarch Simon ben Gamaliel, A. D. 166. Several generations of scholars wrought at this work until by the labors of Jehuda Hanassi, A. D. 219, and his faithful disciples, the work was brought to its close in six portions, called Sedarim, 63 treaties, known as Mesichtoth, and 524 chapters, or Parakim, which contain the Single Mishnas.

The great mass of legal matter brought together in the Mishnas covers a period of nearly 300 years, from about 30 B. C. to about 250 A. D. Doubtless those who labored over the Oral Traditions were seeking to provide for every case, if not for all time; but like all lawmakers in every age, their efforts were unavailing. Later times brought new problems, requiring revisions of ancient law and adaptations to changing life problems. Pronouncements of later masters, decisions of courts, discussions on the meaning and purport of special traditions, attempts at reconciling apparent contradicitions in the received material, amplifications or modifications of certain injunctions rendered necessary by shifting wants and conditions of the commonwealth—all these and other circumstances made further codification peremptory.

The Mishna, though it contained only indigenous laws and institutions, was yet not a little influenced by the spirit of the times. At Berytus, at Alexandria, at Rome, the legal schools were then in their most vigorous stage. Everywhere system and method were being introduced into the vast complex of traditional and popular institutions, decrees and decisions. The Mishna fulfilled all reasonable requirements for such a text book as these schools needed, and was in as classical Hebrew as still could be written in those days of decadence of the "sacred language."

COUNTIES SEEK SHARE IN GAS TAX IN HOUSE MEASURE

Introduced in Lower House On Monday And Is Referred To Ways and Means Committee

WOULD RELIEVE TAXPAYER

The County Commissioners' Association plan for gasoline tax distribution to the counties and Baltimore City was placed before the House of Delegates in the form of a bill Monday night by Delegate Strect Baldwin, a Democratic member from Baltimore county.

The measure was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

This is the first of the recommendations included in the four-point program of the association to be introduced in the Legislature.

He said that the bills will be offered in the House at a later date embodying the other three association proposals, but that it is expected the biggest fight will be on the gasoline tax division plan.

Would Relieve Tax on Real Estate

As explained by Baldwin, in a statement he issued in connection with the introduction of his bill, the bill would reallocate "the proceeds of the gasoline tax to relieve the local taxes on real estate in the various counties and in Baltimore City, the same having been approved by the fifteen boards of County Commissioners at their recent meeting in Annapolis."

"The association thinks that this is the fairest allotment of the tax possible without impairing the functions of the State Roads Commission and at the same time retaining the important right of local self government for the counties and Baltimore City," Baldwin's statement said.

"Realizing the plight of the taxpayers of Baltimore, as well as of the counties, the commissioners, through this bill, raised the percentage of Baltimore's share from 20 per cent to 30 per cent on the entire 4-cent tax, and also, in contrast with the State Roads Commission's plan of the money to be spent by the State Roads Commission, turned the same over to the city to spend as it sees fit, relieving its levy for maintenance and reconstruction of its streets and highways.

"On the basis of the tax collected for 1932, this will mean a relief to the taxpayers of Baltimore City of two million four hundred thousand dollars, or about 25 cents of their rate.

Create Fund To Retire Bonds

"This bill also complies with the Governor's plan to use the balance of the one-half cent tax originally created for overhead crossings and bridges to retire State bonds created for road purposes. It also leaves intact the present distribution and administration of the one and one-half cent lateral road tax by the State Roads Commission, thereby continuing the program of new construction in the various counties, as at present, which means quite a bit to the unemployment situation now existing.

"After deducting 30 per cent for Baltimore as its share, the bill allocates one-half of the two-cent reconstruction and maintenance gasoline tax refund to the various county commissioners, to be used for relieving their levies for maintenance and construction of their county road systems and for not other purpose. This, in the case of the smaller counties, will wipe out entirely their road levy and very materially reduce same in the larger counties."

Of the seventy per cent of the returns from one-half of the two-cent gas tax, which would go to the counties on a basis of road mileage and

First Snow Since Christmas Disappears Beneath Sun's Rays

Snow which covered the western portion of Maryland over the week-end disappeared on Monday and Tuesday beneath the rays of the sun, but the weather continued cool.

The three inches of snow which fell last Thursday was augmented by several additional inches Friday, and with the wind piling it into drifts on Saturday and Sunday, the outlook was none too promising.

This was the first winter weather of any consequence since Christmas. Ten inches of snow was reported at Grantsville over the week-end with drifts piled high along Keyser's Ridge. Automobile traffic, however, was not blocked, although impeded by ice and fog.

THREE GARRETT COUNTY BILLS ARE INTRODUCED

One Would Repeal Law Providing For Payment of Bounties

Three Garrett measures were introduced in the House of Delegates on Monday night. The Garrett county delegation sponsored all three.

One would exempt Garrett county from the statute which provides that one-half of the fines and forfeitures in the Circuit Court shall go to the Bar Association for the purchase of books for the library maintained at the court house for the use of the Judges of the Circuit Court. Six of the twenty-three counties at present are exempt from that statute. The bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Another of the proposals would reduce the cost of keeping and maintaining prisoners committed to the County Jail from 60 cents to 40 cents per day. This measure was referred to the Garrett county delegation for consideration.

The third of the measures, referred to the Committee on Game and Fish, would repeal the existing law providing for payment of bounties for killing weasels, wild cats and foxes.

O. C. Bittinger, Near Park, Has Best Jersey Herd In State

Orval C. Bittinger, Pleasant Valley farmer, near Mountain Lake Park, was awarded a silver platter at a meeting of the State Dairymen's Association, Baltimore, on Saturday, for having the best producing Jersey herd in the State of Maryland.

Mr. Bittinger's herd averaged 6,786 pounds of milk and 372 pounds of butter fat per cow for the period of one year. His herd throughout the year averaged 13 head.

Mr. Bittinger attended Saturday's meeting in Baltimore where the platter was presented. Silver platters were awarded by breeders' associations to winners in other breeds at the same time, but Mr. Bittinger was the only Garrett county winner.

He told County Agent John H. Carter he began to build up his herd thirteen years ago. During the past two or three years he became a member of the Cow Testing Association, which is a requirement in becoming eligible to compete for prizes among the State's breeding associations.

Before he began to improve his herd by a registered sire, and getting rid of non-producers, the percentage of butterfat in milk was less than 4 percent. Last year the average was 5.48 percent, which is .16 percent higher than the standard set by the National Jersey Herd association.

Mr. Bittinger had one cow in his herd last year to produce 485 pounds of butterfat. He is strongly in favor of the cow testing association, the testing of cattle for tuberculosis, and claims that the Extension service has helped materially in raising the standard of his herd, both by valuable information and personal assistance. He states that his herd shows a profit each month.

To Show Railway Pictures At Meeting of Rotary Club

George L. Bryson, district passenger agent of the Canadian railways, with headquarters in Washington, D. C., will be a guest of the Oakland Rotary club tomorrow evening at its weekly meeting when he will show moving pictures of scenes along the railways of his company.

This is Mr. Bryson's second trip to Oakland, having attended a meeting of the club about a year ago Delbert M. Davis was the speaker at the weekly meeting last week, his subject being "Monetary Circulation."

Past president's night and ladies' night will be observed by the club on Friday, February 10.

ANNUAL OUTLAY OF STATE COUNTIES IS $1,282,000

Salaries of School Teachers and Road Employes Excepted—Balmore County Is Highest

GARRETT IS NEAR BOTTOM

Maryland's twenty-three counties spend a total of approximately $1,282,000 a year on the salaries and expenses of their local officials, exclusive of what they pay their school teachers and road employes.

The expenditures on local government—for such offices as County Commissioners, Sheriffs, Boards of of Election Supervisors, Orphan's Court, Tax Collectors and Treasurers—range from $388,990 in Baltimore county to $8,950 a year spent by St. Mary's county. The second highest salary total is that of Montgomery county, the pay roll of which at the end of the last year was $212,406.90

Salary and other expense totals of other counties for the last year were: Allegany, $70,796; Anne Arundel, $65,515; Calvert, $10,100; Caroline, $17,406; Carroll, $30,211; Cecil, $33,464; Charles, $15,847; Dorchester, $17,800; Frederick, $55,019; Garrett, $16,597; Harford, $38,234; Howard, $23,998; Kent, $15,560; Prince George's, $78,919; Queen Anne's, $18,782; Somerset, $22,406; Talbot, $25,516; Washington, $45,569; Wicomico, $28,757, and Worcester, $18,915.

Garrett county was fourth from the lowest in the per capita cost of county employes at 83 cents, while Montgomery was highest with $4.06. The average was $1.24.

Wide Salary Range

Throughout the State there is a wide divergence in the yearly salaries paid officials who occupy the same posts. In Baltimore county—the wealthiest county in the State—the members of the Board of County Commissioners get $3,600 a year, and two attorneys for the board get $600 a year each. Charles county pays its Commissioners $200 a year each, and its board counsel gets $100. The next highest paid Board of Commissioners is that of Cecil county, where they draw $2,000 annually. In Montgomery county they get $1,800, in Harford $1,500 and the same in Allegany. The majority of counties, however, pay between $400 and $750.

The total expended in the State last

Held on Charge of Entering and Robbing Store

Harold W. McCullough, Friendsville, is being held in the Garrett county jail on charges of breaking into the store of Earl Guard on Tuesday night and taking $30 in cash from the register.

The arrest was made yesterday by Sheriff W. H. Haenftling and C. W. Spear, deputy. Entrance to the building was effected by breaking a window in the rear of the storeroom. McCullough will be held for action of the Grand Jury.

Ben Fike, also of Friendsville, was taken to the jail at Somerset, Pa., yesterday, charged with butchering a beef in that county recently.

Edwin Kenneth Reese, Dayton, O., who was brought back to Oakland several months ago on charges of passing a bad check, was released to New York authorities recently on similar charges, and a letter was received at the office of the sheriff stating that Reese had been sentenced to from 6 months to three years for the offense.

To Enforce Dog Ordinance

Due to a number of complaints from residents of Oakland, Mayor Grover C. Stemple has announced that the dog ordinance, passed by Council last spring, prohibiting dogs from running at large, would be strictly enforced from this date.

The ordinance was observed for several weeks after it became a law, it was stated, but recently dog owners have become lax in observing the terms of the ordinance. Mayor Stemple advises that all dogs be kept under leash.

Flue Fire Extinguished

A flue fire at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Faherty, Oak street, on Sunday morning, was extinguished without doing damage to the property. An alarm was turned in and the local department responded, but the services of the fire fighters were not required.

ANNIVERSARY WEEK TO BE OBSERVED BY BOY SCOUTS

February 8 to 14 Designated as Celebration of Twenty-Third Birthday of Incorporation

FULL PROGRAM ARRANGED

The twenty-third anniversary of the Boy Scouts of America will be celebrated February 8 to 14. The celebration recalls the fact that a "good turn" performed in London for an American visitor by an unknown Boy Scout was responsible for the bringing of the Boy Scout movement to the United States.

The Oakland Boy Scout troop will celebrate the event with a meeting on Wednesday night, Friday night, Saturday morning, Sunday morning and Monday evening.

On Wednesday evening, February 8, at 8:30 in the Scout Hall, the scouts will rededicate themselves to the scout oath and law, at the same time every other scout in the land is doing the same thing. A short program is being arranged and W. W. Dawson, chairman of the troop committee, will say a few words. It is planned to have all older scouts who are in this community to attend at this time.

At the regular scout meeting on Friday evening, February 10, there will be a special program, and on Saturday morning, February 11, a scout mobilization will be held followed by a community good turn, which will probably be the planting of about 300 historic nuts.

Sunday morning, February 12, the scouts will attend St. Paul's Methodist church in a body where Rev. W. S. Patterson will speak on a subject linking the boy scout ideals to Lincoln.

Father-Son Dinner

A father and son dinner, in the nature of a pig roast, will be held on Monday evening, February 13, at 6 o'clock. William Turney, camp cook for several years past, will preside at the pig, which will be roasted by Henry Lauer, a member of the court of honor. A program is being arranged by John McIntire, Eugene Nordeck, Irving Broadwater, Jack Treacy, George Stuck and one or two others, and scout contests will be conducted.

Officers assisting the scoutmaster in the general arrangements of details include Bernard Gonder, Jr., assistant scoutmaster; Robert Altstetter, junior assistant; Schell Hoye, senior patrol leader; Walter Dawson, Jr., Kenneth Lawton, patrol leaders, and the committee above mentioned.

While this dinner will bring the anniversary week officially to a close, there will be an overnight hike on the Saturday following at the scout camp, weather permitting.

During the twenty-three years since the formal incorporation of the Boy Scout movement took place, on February 8, 1910, more than 6,000,000 men and boys at one time or another have shared membership in the organization.

Pass Fifteen Merit Badges

Six second and first class scouts passed fifteen merit badges at the regular meeting of the Court of Honor held Monday evening in the Masonic club room. Robert Broadwater and Horace O'Donnell passed five each; Ward Hinebaugh passed chemistry merit badge, the first one to pass this examination in the history of the troop.

Merit badges were awarded as follows: Robert Browning, firemanship; Robert Broadwater, animal industry, reading, sheep farming, pathfinding, public health; Ward Hinebaugh, chemistry; John Darby, firemanship; Hopwood Wooddell, first aid, public health; Horace O'Donnell, first aid, handicraft, reading, public health, pathfinding.

William Grant and Laural Whipkey completed their tenderfoot requirements at the last meeting and were presented with the second class badges.

Bayard Eagles to Meet Fairmont

The Bayard Eagles basketball team will meet the team from the Fairmont Business College at Fairmont, on Friday evening in the Oakland high school auditorium. The Business College team defeated the Fairmont State College team and twice defeated the West Virginia University freshmen.

FUNERAL REVEALS MISHAP VICTIM HAS TWO WIDOWS

Records Show Orland Smith Wed Few Days Before Fatal Wreck

Orland Smith, 23, was buried Saturday in Bluemont cemetery, Grafton, W. Va. After the services in the Bartlett funeral home two women claimed he was their husband.

Maxine, the daughter of Mrs. Mehle Wood, of Buckhannon, exhibits a certificate of marriage dated January 19, in Oakland, setting forth that she and Mr. Smith were married here on that date by the Rev. W. S. Patterson, Methodist Episcopal pastor, and Harry Clark, convalescing from hurts suffered when the car in which he was riding with Smith wrecked, killing Smith, near Brookside on Wednesday night, is quoted as saying while they were in Oakland Wednesday afternoon Smith pointed out the place where they were married.

Doris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Mathews, of Upper Maple Avenue, Grafton, also claims she was married to Smith but says she has lost or misplaced or at least can't find the marriage certificate. The Taylor county (W. V.) records fail to show a marriage certificate issued to them but in the registration book for Webster precinct she is registered as Doris Smith, 21, Democrat," while her parents are registered as Republicans.

Two children, two and one years old, born to the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mathews, claim the dead man as their father, through the contentions of their mother.

GARRETT-ALLEGANY JAILS RATED AMONG BEST FIVE

State Board of Welfare Inspector Puts Them In First Rank

A marked improvement in conditions of the county jails of Maryland over previous inspections was noted in the annual report made by Howard C. Hill, inspector, to the State Board of Welfare.

Hill divided the jails of the various counties into groups according to their conditions, rating those in Allegany, Baltimore, Garrett, Montgomery and Prince George's as the best.

A new building to replace the present one, which was classed in the group with the lowest rating, was recommended for Calvert county.

Hill emphasized the need of better bathing facilities as a practical need, pointing out that cleanliness contributes to the personal health of the inmates and has a bearing on the sanitary condition of beds and cells.

The rating of the various county jails was:

Grade A—Allegany, Baltimore, Garrett, Montgomery, Prince George's.

Grade B—Anne Arundel, Frederick, Queen Anne's, Washington.

Grade C—Carroll, Charles, Dorchester, Harford, Howard, St. Mary's, Somerset.

Grade D—Calvert, Caroline, Cecil, Kent, Talbot, Wicomico, Worcester.

Hill criticized the equal treatment of prisoners awaiting trial and those already sentenced. He expressed his opinion that prisoners awaiting trial should not be subjected to the same privations and duties as those already sentenced.

Such complete segregation and separate treatment, however, he reported, is difficult in many of the jails.

Fined for Law Infringements

Asa Stewart, Hutton, was fined $1 and costs before Justice W. A. Gonder on Wednesday on a charge of being drunk and disorderly at a meeting of miners at Crellin on Tuesday. Stewart pleaded guilty.

Harry Strahin, Tunnelton, West Va., was fined $2 and costs on January 28, for having no automobile operators license in his possession when he was stopped by an officer for some other minor infringement of the law.

F. F. A. Members Attend W. Va. Farm and Home Week

Tuesday, January 31, fifty members of the local F. F. A. motored to Morgantown, W. Va., for West Virginia Farm and Home Week. Features of the trip were a visit to the poultry, dairy cattle and several other live stock farms; a visit to the horticultural building and the farm exhibit building connected with the University. A talk was given by Dr. E. L. Nixon, of Pennsylvania State College, who was the chief speaker at the potato banquet held in Oakland last spring. The boys were accompanied to Morgantown by W. E. Spoerlein, H. L. Biggs and O. T. Graser.

STATE SENATE IN DIVISION ON REVENUE PROPOSAL

Some Members of the Senate Look For Factions To Reach Harmonious Agreement

SALES TAX MAY RESULT

Annapolis, Feb. 1.—A sharp division of senatorial opinion over Senator William Earle Withgott's proposed general sales tax was indicated today as the Senate met with budget matters still holding the center of the stage.

A perfunctory session of the Upper House yielded only a scattering of local bills before the body adjourned until noon tomorrow and committees plunged again into their work.

Senator Withgott's plan, which will call for a sweeping sales tax of between one and two per cent on all commodities with no exceptions, was the chief topic of discussion today, and the reaction to it was varied. The Talbot county Democrat said it was not his intention to advance his proposal until after he was sure that the budget had been cut to "an absolute minimum." He did not believe, however, that sufficient savings could be made under the budget to care for Baltimore's $12,000,000 relief needs or for a substantial reduction in the counties' school cost burden.

Coad Opposes Idea

Senator Joseph Allan Coad, (Dem., St. Mary's) was emphatically opposed to the sales tax idea, maintaining that a sufficient savings could be made in the budget to care for tax reductions.

"I am certain that more than $1,000,000 yearly can be stripped from the budget," said Coad, leader of a semi-insurgent bloc which has attacked the Governor's budget recommendations consistently for the past two weeks. "I am unalterably opposed to any form of additional taxation unless it can be demonstrated that reductions will not be sufficient, a possibility that I will not concede."

Meanwhile, members of the Senate close to the administration believed that the factional lines within the Senate were drawing nearer together and that a harmonious program would result. Some privately conceded that the general sales tax idea—as opposed to the Governor's suggestion for specially selected commodity taxes—was gaining ground and that Withgott's plan ultimately might be adopted.

Library Card Party Scheduled For This Evening

Flinch has been added to the games to be played at the card party which is being held for the purpose of raising funds to carry on the work of the Free Public Library, on Thursday night, February 2. The tables for flinch will be at the home of Mrs. D. Edward Offutt, and those interested are asked to telephone either Mrs. Offutt or Mrs. James Willison for reservations.

Bridge and five hundred and possibly other games will be played in the Knights of Pythias hall as before planned. Those unable to attend the party are urged to make a donation for the support of the organization.

A meeting of the association will be held February 21, when officers will probably be elected.

May Form Student Government Association at O. H. S.

Further discussion concerning the formation of a Student Government association is being held this morning in Oakland High school, according to F. D. Bittle, principal.

The association would enable students to control to a gerat degree the activitles and different problems of the school, giving them responsibilities which would make them realize the school's interests were their own. There would be faculty members in the organization.

Red Cross Names Added

Four more names were added to the Red Cross roll call list bringing the amount turned in to Mrs. Samuel Cole, chairman, to $430.

Members turned in this week include Madeline Hillcary, Gorman; Lola Bennett, Grantsville; Elizabeth H. Williams, Gorman; and Mrs. Florence Valentine, Accident.

Lesson for February 5

JESUS CHOOSES THE TWELVE

Mark 3:7-35.

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you. John 15:16.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Choosing Special Helpers.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Taken Into Partnership.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Our Call to Friendship and Service.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Discipleship and Its Meaning.

I. The Divine Servant Ministering by the Sea (vv. 7-12).

1. Why he withdrew (v. 6). It was because of the murderous plotting of the Pharisees against his life. Their opposition began when Jesus claimed to have power on earth to forgive sins (2:10); grew in intensity when he mingled with publicans and sinners (2:16); was fanned into a violent flame when he set at naught their false interpretations of the Sabbath law (2:23-28).

2. To whom he ministered (vv. 7, 8). It was to a great multitude representing a wide stretch of territory.

3. The results (vv. 9-12).

a. The disciples prepared a small ship (v. 9). So great was the pressure of the thronging multitudes that he commanded the disciples to provide the ship so that he might be saved from them.

b. Unclean spirits fell down before him (vv. 11, 12). They not only bowed before him, but confessed him as the very Son of God. This testimony he refused, doubtless for two reasons:

(1) The time was not ripe to proclaim him publicly as the Son of God.

(2) They were not the beings to make him known. Jesus consistently refused the testimony of those who were not in moral accord with him.

II. The Divine Servant Calling Associates (vv. 13-19).

In this way he made provision for the carrying forward of his work after he was gone. Before choosing the twelve he spent a whole night in prayer (v. 13). (cf. Luke 6:12). From among his disciples he choose twelve whom he ordained for a twofold purpose:

1. "That they might be with him" (v. 14). Fellowship with the Lord is not only the highest privilege of the disciples, but it is an indispensable qualification for witnessing. It is needful to be with him to catch his spirit.

2. "That he might send them forth to preach" (v. 14). To proclaim the good news of salvation was the supreme mission of the disciples. Concerning those who were to be the messengers of Jesus Christ, note:

a. Twelve were ordained (v. 14). This was the beginning of the process by which the Triune God was to make manifest his grace to the whole world. The number twelve is the product of the heavenly three and the earthly four, thus indicating the purpose of the Triune God to reveal himself unto the four quarters of the earth.

b. Their characteristics (vv. 17-19).

(1) They were from the middle ranks of society, the common walks of life.

(2) Men of average ability. Christ did not go to the schools for his apostles and yet he chose men of mental grasp and efficiency.

(3) Men of diverse temperamental gifts. The grouping of the apostles shows men of impulse and leadership, of the reflective and inquisitive type, and men of practical business abilities.

III. The Servant's Increasing Difficulties (vv. 20-35).

1. The suspicion of his friends (vv. 20, 21). The needy people pressed upon him so that he had no time to eat. When his friends saw his zeal eating him up, they suspected that he was losing his mind.

2. The violent opposition (v. 22-30). Added to the embarrassment of the suspicion of his friends, the Lord now had to face the sneers of the scribes.

3. Visited by his mother and brothers (vv. 31-35). We are left to conjecture as to the motive to this visit. Perhaps they likewise suspicioned his mental balance. It may be that they desired to take him home and nurse him back to normalcy.

Be Still Then

When you go alone in the quiet time and place with the Book, quietly pray, "Blessed Prayer-Spirit, Master-Spirit, teach me how to pray"; and he will. Do not be nervous or agitated, wondering if you will understand. Study to be quiet—mind-quiet, body-quiet. Remember Luther's version of David's words: "Be silent to God and let him mold thee."—Dr. S. D. Gordon.

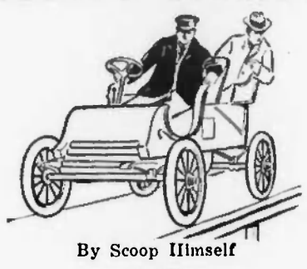
God Behind Nature

No man can stand in the tropic forests without feeling that they are temples filled with the various productions of the God of nature, and that there is more in man than the breath of his body.—Darwin.

Scepticism

They that deny a God destroy man's nobility; for certainly man is of kin to the beasts by his body; and if he be not of kin to God by his spirit, he is an ignoble creature.—Bacon.

SCOOP'S COLUMN



By Scoop Himself

What Do You Think?

Feeling that for some years past the groundhog's prophecies have been meeting with general disapproval, no matter what his predictions Scoop felt that it would be well to ascertain what other members of the animal kingdom think about the woodchuck, badger, whistlepig, otherwise known as Arctomys Monax if you want to get technical, and you might as well get technical as technocratic.

Scoop, in company with Col. Bell, visited several Garrett county homes during the week, Scoop with his trusty pencil and paper, and Col. Bell with his picture machine and flashlight powder.

The questions asked each one were "What do you think of your fellow creature Arctomys?" and "What's your prediction?"

The first one we saw was Paul Friend's cow. "I think he's a lot of hooey," said Bossy Friend. "Last year he prophesied six more weeks of winter weather and up to that time we hadn't had any yet. As for myself I predict a cessation of snow and the early sprouting of green meadow grass. An optomist, that's me all over, and anyway I want to get out and romp with the heifers and get off this stool Paul's had me on all winter. I'm getting corns."

No More Snow

Harry Paugh's chicken barn was the next stop. "Makes no difference to me what the weather is," said Biddy Paugh. "My boss keeps me warm anyhow, and what the groundhog predicts means nothing to my egg record. Of course I like to strut among the green grass, but barn strutting has its good points. If only he didn't have us wired."

* * *

"Your darn right we'll have more snow," said Sincell's parrot as we opened the door. "And heaven help the band boys if they go to Pittsburgh this year. Personally it doesn't make any difference to me. I can learn slang either winter or summer and Mit's been teaching me a lot this winter. Aretomys is all right in his place, but his place is in his hole."

Your Darn Tootin

"I'd like to have Arctomys by the neck," said Bill Browning's dog Rubinoff. "He's always predicting more snow and getting us all excited over a good hunt and then always flops. Personally I like snow. It feels good on the nose, and then I can always get inside where it's nice and warm when I want to. Not wanting to lose what friends I have I'll not predict any weather. That's the groundhog's job. He has no friends, so it doesn't matter.

* * *

Ed. Wallace's cat was the next. "I don't know anything about predictions or about Arctomys either," said Pussy Wallace. "Winters are nice as I have my own bed and covers, too. Summers are also nice, when one can stroll in the moonlight and have singing parties and sech. I'd like to predict an early spring, because it means more freedom for me, and hot-cha, do I like my freedom?"

* * *

As we were returning to the studio to get the photos developed our old friend the Dodo bird lit on Col. Bell's shoulder. "Are they going to let that old Woodchuck predict this year's weather after what I told the people of Garrett county two years ago?" he sneered. "It takes nerve to prophesy here in Garrett county, and that low-brow animal runs at the sight of his shadow. I predict snow at the following times through the remainder of the winter and spring. Just when you think winter is over; following a warm spell and a cool rain; when the wind blows in your east windows; when all the snow fences are taken down; when you plan a trip for the following week-end; when a basketball game is scheduled away from home; when the roses bloom again; whenever you don't take your overcoat to the office. Now, let the groundhog beat that!"

* * *

After a number of animals were interviewed, we came to the conclusion that the groundhog is thought of as a lowly animal with no right to his position as a prognosticator, or even a technocrat. A fish which got to the Little Yough river from the Gulf of Mexico, via the Mississippi, Ohio, and Big Yough, told one of them that the Gulf stream was moving in closer to the coast of the United States, and that groundhog or no groundhog, the winters would be milder in future years.

But maybe he never heard of Garrett county.

Several people have been disappointed because I did not write a column or so when "Happy" Harned became a "Happy Pappy." Explanation: The Owl's club members made it hot enough for him. And what he needed was a rest. He is almost recuperated now, however, and will be placed back on the list of those who are eligible to have their names mentioned in this column.

ACCIDENT

School Notes

All students in the Accident school are racking their brains this week to think of the many things they are having in exams, which they are positive they have never had, and just think! it will last all week.

Prof. H. W. Beggs was called to Westminster last Thursday on account of the death of his grandmother. He returned Monday.

In spite of the snow and cold weather, attendance this week is good.

Open House was held in the Home Economics room last week for the mothers and friends to observe the club girls serve dinners and lunches. This completes the schedule of cooking for this year.

Musical Comedy Is Presented.

A musical comedy in two acts was presented by the Glee club. Kenneth Keller had the part of Toby Duhn, owner of the circus, who was in love with Sally Squeezem (Lena Miller). Norman Humberson (Alonzo Squeezem) Sally's father, objected to the affair. Maybelle Jaybird (Leola Williams) a widow and her spoild son, Willie (Carl Haenftling) furnished plenty of amusement. After trouble about n mortgage, Sally's father was captivated by the Widow Jaybird and he also consented to the marriage of his daughter Sally to Tony Dunn. Catherine Richter played the part of the widow's old maid sister, Eliza Slimmer, and had charge of her spoiled son Willie, who was continually in trouble somewhere. Inky Snow was the colored helper in the Circus and was played by Wm. Harmon while Ray Miller was the comic Irish helper (Dinky Moore). Acrobatic stunts between acts were furnished by little Margaret Lyon and Mary Bond, the clown. The following students composed the chorus, furnishing many musical selections: Mary Bond, Jane Brant, Margaret DeWitt, Florence Dixon, Nellie Georg, Alberta Hanft, Bessie House, Helen Miller, Gladys Mimna, Bernice Speicher, Blanche and Mabel Brenneman, Margaret and Verna Mae Frantz, Olive Frickey, Fern Frazee, Grace Glotfelty, Irene Holiday, Wilma Reichenbecker, Robert McLaughlin, Hubert Glotfelty, Charles Tissue, Orlando Hetrick, Louis Mallou, Howard Alexander, Randall Sebold, Glenn Colflesh and Webster Brenneman.

The comedy was presented of Friday afternoon and Friday and Saturday nights. Receipts for the club amounted to approximately $35. Miss Ruth Conley, music supervisor, directed the operetta.

William Miller was transacting business at Westernport last week.

George Sebold and family and Foster Glover and family were recent guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. McGettigan.

Mr. and Mrs. James J. Riley, of New York City spent the week-end visiting the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Georg.

Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Gode, son and daughter, who spent the past month in Chicago, returned Wednesday. Rev. Gode will resume his duties as pastor of Zion Lutheran church.

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Spoerlein and Mr. and Mrs. Howard Schlossnagle motored to Baltimore where they attended the automobile show and spent several days last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Alexander and son Richard spent Friday at Salisbury, Pa.

Rev. W. C. Long and wife of Mt. Morris, Pa., visited Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Weitzell, Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Riley were dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. B. O. Aiken, Saturday night.

GARRETT COUNTY IS BELOW AVERAGE OF PER CAPITA COST OF EMPLOYES; SALARY TOTALS OF COUNTIES GIVEN

That Garrett County was fourth from the lowest of the twenty-three counties of the State in per capita cost for county officials, is shown in a tabulation of population compared with county salary totals.

A series of articles detailing and explaining the financial set-up and problems confronting the respective counties has been published in the Baltimore Sun daily during recent weeks. These articles set out the salary list, exclusive of teachers and road workers.

Saint Mary's county had the lowest per capita cost, with 59 cents; Dorchester, second with 66 cents; Washington, third, with 69 cents; Garrett, fourth, with 83 cents. Montgomery county had the highest with $4.06. The average for the 23 counties was $1.24. A tabulation of the counties, their population, the per capita cost and the salary total of county officials, exclusive of school teachers and road workers, has been made by The Republican and is herewith presented:

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

The next word to challenge our attention as we look backward through the centuries to the days when men had already well begun to search the Scriptures, is the word Midrash. Unlike the other names which were adopted to designate the translations in Aramaic which have been considered in our previous articles, the word Medrash is of Hebrew origin. It is a general name given to the free exposition of the Old Testament, with the historical, legendary, exegetical, didactic and homiletic comment thereon, which, for about 1500 years after the Babylonian exile, formed the center of all mental activity, both in and out of the schools, among the Jews.

There were certain prohibitions and ordinances in the Mosaic records, to which a precise meaning was not, in all cases, attached. The writers of the Midrash, doubtless recognized leaders in the rabinnical schools of their day, developed certain hermeneutical rules, specified and particularized, and surrounded by traditional ordinances. These general expository rules were known as Halacha, which in turn means the rule by which to go, or the binding, authoritative, civil and religious law.

Another branch of the Midrash, however, is a kind of free poetical homeletics on the whole body of the Old Testament, and is more noticeably ethical and consolatory.

While the Midrach, like many other ancient homilies, prevents as a whole an unattractive mass, a few grains of wheat in a mountain of chaff, it gives many valuable hints to patient scholars along historical lines. Its chronological notices help in the fixing of importana dates, while for the theologian and the philosopher there are to be found within its scope remarkable suggestions in logic, metaphysics and theology. Much may also be leared about contemporaneous peoples and there are even hints of the dawn of the natural sciences.

When one has observed the anxious care exercised by these interpreters of the Word lest the censors of exegesis set up by them should be violated, and perceives how well-nigh impossible it is for the every-day man or woman to find a safe way through such a labyrinth of method, the wisdom of the American Bible Society's plan of publication becomes increasingly apparent.

This society has but one ideal in its publication of the Bible, and that is to print the Scriptures in the language of the people without note or comment. The blessed Word of God can thus speak its own message to every man in his own tongue.

Thus, as on the first Pentecost, the Spirit of God may be free to reveal the truth to all who read or hear, without the possibility of confusion by exhaustive comment.

The Columbia University School of Business says that the left hand page of a newspaper attracts three times as many readers as the right hand page. In our opinion it depends on where the comic strips are located.

Was Gen. Washington Religious?

One of the questions frequently asked about George Washington was as to the quality of his religion. Some so-called modern biographers have called into question the statments that Washington was a religious man. In an interesting article in the current issue of the National Republic, under the caption, "Was Washington Religious," Mr. Albert R. Beatty goes into detail to refute in an interesting way the statements of those who would question the sincerity of Washington's Christianity.

In part, Mr. Beatty says:

"Perhaps no aspect of the meritorious life of George Washington has caused as much controversy among his innumerable biographers and has suffered as much at their hands as that of his religious habits and belief. Many have tactfully avoided the subject, passing over it hastily with but a few vague sentences, and frequently asking, but failing to answer satisfactorily, the question: Was Washington religious? Others, particularly those who have taken it upon themselves to 'humanize' him, have inferred, without any apparent substantial evidence, that he was not religious, was lukewarm as a churchman, and at times, actually entertained non-Christian views. Two or three have classed him as an atheist, but have not advanced a single act or declaration by Washington that would tend to support their ridiculous assertions. On the other hand, a number have attempted to depict him as a devout gentleman and an orthodox believer in and worshipper of Jesus Christ. Is it little wonder that the average reader is in a quandary as to what writer's statements he should accept as facts.

"To ascertain the true extent of his piety and Christian character, I was privileged to spend some time with the unusual Washingtoniana collection of the late Edward Ambler Armstrong, at Princeon, New Jersey, which is recognized as one of the most notable of its kind in the country today. From this remarkable assemblage of original letters and documents entirely in the handwriting of or dictated and signed by the Father of his Country, and hundreds of volumes and a vast amount of historical data about him and his contemporaries, as well as parish records made available to me by the present rectors of Pohick Church, at Lorton, Va., and Christ Church, at Alexandria, Va., which were attended by General Washington while he was at Mount Vernon, was the material for this present article obtained.

"Anyone who has carefully perused the letters, manuscripts and documents penned by the General, and has studied his daily habits and performances as recorded by himself, members of his immediate family and reputable witnesses, will find no difficulty in determining his status as a believer in Divine Providence and Christianity. There is abundant evidence that he was a true Christian in every sense that the word implies; and, as one prominent minister wrote to me the other day, the world would be better if the religion of his detractors were as good.

"Born on February 22, 1732, at Wakefield, Bridges Creek, Westmoreland county, Virginia, the first-born of Augustine Washington and Mary Bell Washington, the boy who was destined to become the guiding star of his country, was impressively christened according to the form of baptism of the Church of England on, as the record contained in the Washington family Bible shows, 'the 3rd of April following.' Beverly Whiting and Captain Christopher Books were the godfathers, and Mrs. Mildred Gregory was the godmother.

"The religious training of Washington came in very early life, for his parents were a pious people. While information about his father in this respect is meagre, save that he was a vestryman and an ardent churchman, it is known that Augustine Washington was of a serious tendency, and that most of the few books which he possessed were of a religious nature. Before his death, on April 12, 1734, when young George was but eleven years of age, he did much to counsel his son, who was mature for his years, in the way that he should go."

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1933.

A SILVER LINING—

Coming at a time when many farmers are hollering about the expenses of vocational agriculture work in high schools, the extension work in the state through county agents and specialists, it is indeed refreshing to talk to one farmer who has had experience with and without their help, and who strongly favors the continuance of extension assistance.

A recent award for having the highest producing Jersey herd in the state of Maryland is just one of the many reminders Mr. Orval C. Bittinger has had of his foresight in accepting the advice of members of the Extension service.

Thirteen years ago Mr. Bittinger read some pamphlets on herd improvement. He began to carry out improved practices. The percentage of butterfat in the milk was less than four percent when he began. Now he has the highest producing herd in the state, and his cows are showing a profit, in spite of the low price for milk.

He is a member of the cow testing association, and states that the saving of feed the first month more than paid for his membership for that period. He believes that all cows should be T. B. tested, and that all non-producers should be eliminated from the herd. He asks and receives assistance from the county agent and extension workers upon numerous occasions.

However, all the assistance in the world would have availed nothing, had Mr. Bittinger not had the desire and ambition to go ahead. More Garrett county herds could show a profit. Certified seed potato growers are not losing money, and there are other crops in the county that could show a profit if there were scientific methods and ambitions behind it all.

The scientific methods are yours for the asking. But you've got to have your own ambition.

BUY AMERICAN

Newspaper dispatches the other day to the effect that a party of Germans were coming to America to buy $5,000,000 worth of American foods has caused one internationalist to say that when these visitors hear about the "Buy American" movement they are apt to go back home empty handed and "buy German."

This is typical of the argument put forth by internationalists to the effect that Uncle Sam ought to spend his money abroad instead of at home. The fact is, that the "Buy American" was the last of the nationalist purchasing movements to be started in the leading nations of the world. There have been "Buy French" and "Buy German" movements in existence for a long time. And the "Buy British" movement of old John Bull is the most complete and most perfect now in existence. If you don't believe it just pick up a British magazine and look over the advertising. Every civilized nation is now attempting to produce at home as much of what it consumes as is humanely possible.

It is only in the United States where there is much opposition to a "buy at home" movement. The reason is that we have so many international financiers and slackers here who are more interested in the welfare of Europe, for selfish reasons, than they are in the prosperity of the United States.

It is not to he supposed for one moment that representatives of German concerns are coming to the United States to buy fruits and other foodstuffs which could be produced practically in Germany. They are coming for the things they cannot produce at home—not for near beer and pretzels.

No nationalist and protectionist expects to buy American produced goods only. He is intelligent enough to realize that a great many things we use eannot he produced in the United States and must be bought abroad. He has no objection to foreign trade of this kind. What he does object to is the purchasing of foreign commodities which can and are being produced on American farms and in American factories. Every dollar we spend for a competitive foreign article means a dollar less for the American producer. What is the use of sending a dollar to Europe in the hope that the man who gets it may send it back and spend it here, when by buying an American piece of goods we can be sure that the dollar is spent here and goes to the upbuilding of American agriculture or American business.

Sure, let us buy abroad. But let us only buy those things which we can't produce at home. Most of non-competitive articles which we import are luxuries. We can buy more of them from our foreign friends if our own people are producing and selling in the great American market the things which are produced in America.

IN DAYS OF OLD

FORTY YEARS AGO

A cow in its wanderings about town ended its journey in the Glades hotel ice house, fifteen feet above the ground. She had wandered up the stairs picking hay.

D. M. Dixon prepared to move to Oakland from Corinth, and was to occupy Rev. Sharpes' house on Oak street. Oak Hall, T. C. Hinebaugh's hotel on the Park road, was preparing to open for guests early in the spring.

Selbysport was overflowing with spectators to see great banks of ice break up. The ice had gorged in the Youghiogheny River and had piled up for approximately eight hours and as a result the water overflowed the banks of the stream and did some damage to property.

A company of the Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, which had been organized in Oakland, was to he mustered in at the meeting to be held a few days later

Market prices were low. Wheat bran sold at $1.10 per hundred; oats were 50 cents per bushel; sugar, 20 pounds for $1.00; coffee, 23 cents a pound.

Joel Slabach was the speaker at a meeting at Swan Meadow school, his subject being "Making use of one's time while still young." Following the speaking he entertained the audience with a song.

TWENTY YEARS AGO

The first basketball game between the first and second teams of the high school was played with lineups as follows: First team, White, Frantz, Thayer, DeBerry and Chance; second team, Turney, Dawson, Kildow, Naylor and Yutzy

Messrs. George Warnick, Floyd Duckworth and Erwin Fazenbaker, of the Bloomington community, appeared before the county commissioners with reference to a plan in changing the location of a public county road from Savage River bridge at Bloomington to Firm Rock.

The High School seniors gave a box social in Gortner's Hall with sixty present. According to the printed report of the affair, "games were played and boxes were sold by our smooth tongued senior, Frederick Thayer."

WILLIAM BRENNEMAN

William Brenneman, aged 61, died January 27, after a lingering illness due to a complication of diseases. His suffering was intense, but he bore it patiently and without complaint. Mr. Brenneman resided on a farm in the Meadow Mountain community and three months ago he came to Oakland where he was under the constant care of his physician.

His passing was almost simultaneous with that of his brother-in-law and life-long neighbor, Alfred Lohr.

His remains were taken to the family home from Oakland Saturday afternoon. Funeral services were held in the Meadow Mountain Lutheran church Tuesday morning at 11:00 o'clock with interment in the family cemetery.

Mr. Brenneman was united in marriage with Lydia Susan Lohr, April 28, 1895. To this union were born ten children, three of whom preceded him in death. He leaves to mourn their loss a loving wife, one son, Lloyd, at home; six daughters, Mrs. Columbus Oester and Mrs. John Reckner, both of Accident; Mrs. Charles Wiley, of Bittinger; Mrs. Thomas Wiley and Mrs. Holland O'Brien, both of Canton, Ohio, and Mrs. Allen Paugh, Jr., of near Oakland. He was active in the affairs of the community and will be greatly missed by all who knew him. He was a kind neighbor, a devoted husband and a loving father.

Fox, of Friendsville, and a half-sister, Mrs. Susan Turney, of Morgantown, and by a host of other relatives and friends.

Mrs. Sharpless became a member of the Lutheran church at an early age— eight years—and later joined the Methodist church in which denomination she held membersip until her death.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. E. Johnson, of Oakland, with interment in Mount Zion cemetery.

In Loving Remembrance

Wonderful mother, woman and aid,
One who was better God never made;
A wonderful worker, so loyal and true,
One in a million—that mother was you.

Just in your judgment—always right,
Honest and liberal, ever upright;
Loved by your friends and all whom you knew,
Our wonderful mother—that mother was you.

What would I give her hand to clasp,
Her patient face to see;
To hear her voice—to see her face,
As in the days that used to be.

But some sweet day we'll meet again,
Beyond the toil and strife,
And clasp each other's hand once more;
In heaven—that happy life.

MRS. EFFIE B. PARMER

Mrs. Effie Ballew Parmer, widow of Edward Silvers Parmer, died at 3:00 o'clock Friday afternoon at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Stanton, Grantsville. Mrs. Parmer had been ill about two weeks.

Mrs. Parmer was born in Columbus, Mo., a daughter of the late J. S. and Chloe E. Ballew. In 1889 she was married to Mr. Parmer, who died in 1904. She moved from Columbia to Chicago in 1918 and from thence to Grantsville in 1922 to reside with her daughter, Mrs. Stanton.

Mrs. Parmer is survived by another daughter, Mrs. Thomas B. Maurer, of Chicago; a grandson, Sonny Stanton; two brothers, E. S. Ballew, Dallas, Texas, and Stephen Ballew, of Columbia, Mo., and by four sisters, Mrs. R. E. O'Dea and Mrs. Helen Basnett, of Chicago; Mrs. Grant Roder, Harlinger, Tex., and Mrs. Winifred Bandel, of St. Petersburg, Florida.

Funeral services were held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Stanton Monday morning at 10:30 o'clock, Rev. S. D. Sigler, pastor of the Grantsville Lutheran church, officiating.

The Miller-Yoder quartet sang "Come Ye Disconsolate," after which Rev. Sigler read the 51st Psalm, being Mrs. Parmer's favorite portion of the Scriptures, followed by a prayer and a very touching talk on "Mother and honor." 'I't is well with my soul" was sung by the quartet, closing with the Lord's Prayer. Interment was in Grantsville cemetery with a short service and the singing "Abide With Me" at the grave.

The pallbearers were Dr. N. R. Davis, Harvey Gortner, Dr. T. O. Broadwater, Milton Rodamer, Nevin Broadwater and James Elias, of Frostburg.

The deceased lady had made many friends among the peolpe of Grantsville as was evidenced by the numerous floral tributes. She was a kind, generous neighbor and friend, a very ambitious and loving mother to those within the home of her daughter.

Those from a distance who attended the funeral were Mrs. R. E. O'Dea and Mrs. Helen Basnett, sisters, and T. D. Maurer, son-in-law, all of Chicago, and Thomas Smouse, of Cumberland.

COUNTIES SEEK SHARE IN GAS TAX IN HOUSE MEASURE

assessable tax basis, the amount Garrett county would get, according to the Associations' figures, is five percent, or approximately $75,000.

Refute Opponents' Claims

"To combat the argument that this act would impair the commission in its work, the Association of Commissioners has the statement of Hon. E. Brooke Lee, in a speech before this bady, that the State Roads Commission could spare one million five hundred thousand dollars yearly (which is about the amount involved in this act) out of this reconstruction and maintenance fund, without unduly impairing the work of the same commission.

"In opposing the administration's plan to give the State Roads Commission control of the money spent in the county roads and those of Baltimore City, the Association of County Commissioners feels that in view of the Governor's doctrine of local self-government, which he has voiced from one end of this nation to the other, and in which it concurs, there is no one who knows better the needs of their people or is better qualified to judiciously spend the money than the duly elected officers of Baltimore City and the county commissioners of the various counties.

"The Association also pledges itself, as far as it is able, to aid Baltimore city in enacting any local legislation which it may desire to relieve its tax burden."

STATE SENATE IN DIVISION ON REVENUE PROPOSAL

ernor and some of his senatorial supporters for several hours at the Executive Mansion. At the close of this meeting Senator William D. Byron (Dem., Washington county), who has been championing the administration's program off the floor and who had planned to address the Senate today in defense of it said that he "did not believe it now would be necessary" for him to make his appeal.

The Senate Finance Committee, meeting as usual this afternoon, turned its attention particularly to the expenditures of the school boards In an effort to secure further reductions in that department. State Superintendent Albert Cook was scheduled as an early witness before the committee.

May Amend Program

As reverberations of Delegate H. Street Baldwin's gasoline tax proposal —a part of the program adopted by the County Commissions' Association —reached the Senate today it was conceded by some of the administration leaders that the administration's program might be amended to grant Baltimore city 30 per cent of the gasoline tax funds instead of the 20 now proposed. The fundamental differences between the Governor's and the County Commissioners' proposals are that the administration would give the city 24 per cent and would have the counties' share administered by the State Roads Commission, while the counties would grant the city 30 per cent and place the counties' share in the hands of the various commissioners.

Because of the increased ratio, the commissioners' scheme was expected to draw considerable support from the city delegations and it is to offset this that the backers of the administration have about decided on the 30 per cent figure. They will retain, however, the plan to distribute the funds through the Roads Commission.

Baughman Called Before Committee

Thirteen hills were introduced in the House today and after the adoption of two reports on minor measures that body adjourned until noon tomorrow.

Meetings of the Committees on Ways and Means and Game and Fish were called during the afternoon, the former of these two bodies having E. Austin Baughman, Commissioner of Motor Vehicles, as a witness.

Baughman was called to explain to the committee the needs of his department to attempt to justify the amounts asked for in the Governor's budget recommedations.

Much interest appeared in the requisition for additional funds for the purpose of hiring 25 more state police and several members have indicated they will wage a fight to block this appropriation.

A topic of considerable discussion among members gathered in groups about the State House halls was the Association of County Commissioners' proposal for the division of the gasoline tax funds.

Dog Racing Bill

Legal matters were the subject of five measures put before the House today. One would provide that a will to be valid, must be made by a person 21 years of age or older. Another would provide that a female shall be 21 years old before receiving property from a guardian, while a third would set the lawful age for females as the same as that for males for the purpose of receiving bequests of personal property.

One of the proposals would increase the number of judges for the Court of Appeals for Baltimore City from one to three.

Delegate Joseph Mish (Dem., Washington county), was the author of a measure which would make it unlawful for certain county employes or officials to give advice in connection with any case pending before the courts.

All professional and clerical assistants and employes of the State Department of Education would be required to be residents of the State, under a proposal submitted by Delegate Mechau (Dem., Baltimore City).

ANNUAL OUTLAY OF STATE COUNTIES IS $1,282,000

year for Boards of County Commissioner was approximately $183,500. Montgomery county led with an expenditure of $39,280, with part of another total of $11,544, chargeable also to the board expenses. Baltimore county was next with $22,800. The lowest of all was Charles county, the board of which cost $1,300.

Supervisors Get $26,000

Approximately $26,000 was spent by the twenty-three counties for support of their Board of Supervisors of Elections. In Montgomery county the board cost $2,400 last year. Kent county's board stood the county only $450.

Washington county has the highest paid board of supervisors. They get $400 a year each. Caroline county pays its board members $350, and in Southern Maryland, Calvert county gives its supervisors only $100 a year each.

Employment of office help in collection of taxes and making assessments, and in the treasurers' offices of the counties, amounted throughout the State to a total of approximately $180,000 last year.

Montgomery and Baltimore counties led in expenditures of this nature. Baltimore county spent $31,920 on its fiscal agents last year, and Montgomery $38,820. Prince George's county expended $15,400 and Garrett only $2,000.

Paid By Fee System

In addition to the $180,000, some of the counties paid their treasurers fees on the collection of taxes. For example, in Calvert county the treasurer receives no salary at all, but three per cent of his collections.

Another governmental function which is nearly uniform throughout the counties is the Orphans' Court. Six counties, however, pay their judges by the day. They are Washington, Allegany, Frederick, Prince George's, Worcester and Kent. The others spent approximately $27,248 last year for the salaries of judges and their office expenses.

Baltimore county spent the most, paying each judge a salary of $1,413 and a clerk at $628, or a total of $4,867. Montgomery county judges get $900 a year. In Calvert county they are paid $200, and Garrett county expended a total of $372.48 for its Orphans' Court last year.

$3,000 Is Top For Attorneys

Salaries of State's Attorneys, which cost the counties approximately $50,000 during 1932, range from $3,000 to $800. Montgomery, Allegany, Washington, Frederick, Prince George's and Carroll pay $3,000 or over, and St. Mary's pays its attorney $800.

Sheriffs, who are paid direct salaries, received from the seventeen counties in which this method is followed a total of about $72,000 last year. In the other six counties—Dorchester, Calvert, Talbot, Wicomico, Kent and St. Mary's— they are paid out of fees.

Expenses of the Sheriffs' offices in the other counties—including hiring of deputies and in some cases board for prisoners—were as follows: Montgomery, $9,000; Caroline, $4,295; Allegany, $8,700; Washington, $3,000; Somerset, $5,000; Cecil, $3,000; Charles, $6,285; Anne Arundel, $2,700; Harford, $2,400; Frederick, $7,940; Garrett, $7,000; Prince George's, $6,200; Howard, $3,300; Carroll, $2,980; Baltimore, $3,000; Worcester, $900, and Queen Anne's, $1,500.

Resolution Asks for Relief From State and County Taxation

At a meeting of the Democratic State Central Committee for Garrett county, held last Friday, a resolution was passed asking that every department of the State and county government be reduced to the lowest possible cost consistent with the proper carrying on of governmental activities. A copy of the resolution was forwarded to the Governor and a copy to the Garrett county delegation in the General Assembly.

The committee made no recommendation for the appointment of a justice of the peace to fill the position made vacant by the death of the late A. S. Teats, although a paper was before the body, numerously signed by leading business men of the community asking that Mr. H. A. Loraditch be recommended for appointment.

Another meeting of the committee is scheduled for Friday when recommendations for appointment of justices, a member of the school board, election supervisors, and other matters will be discussed.

RECORD IS ESTABLISHED IN FOREST FIRE CONTROL

Average Fire Held To 13 Acres; Damage Is About $50,000

A record was established during 1932 by the Maryland State Department of Forestry when the average forest fire was held to 13 acres in area. Despite an unusually large number of forest fires in 1932 the average fire burned only about one-fifth as much land as was burned per fire for ten years preceding.

According to the Forester, 1,265 fires burned over 16,711 acres, which is only 75/ of the total forest area of Maryland. About $50,000 damage was done by the fires in 1932, which is quite in contrast with the $660,000 loss through forest fires in 1930. The drying out of the soil in the latter drought year was still apparent last year, the forester said, in the extreme difficulty encountered by forest wardens in bringing fires under control, and by the fact that so many fires got started.

"Smoking" continues to be the leading cause of forest fires, comprising 37/ of the total. Though no lives were lost in fighting Maryland forest fires during the past year, two forest wardens suffered fractured legs in battling flames in rough country. 82/ of all the fires were either caused by smokers, brush burners or incendiarists. In the latter class are found persons who are trying to burn out properties belonging to rival liquor distillers operating in the forests, to spite neighbors for some petty offense, to supposedly improve the pasturage or huckleberry crops, or just to see something burn. The State has caught several incendiarists in the past few years and had them prosecuted under the law which goes so far as to provide a maximum penalty of $2,000 fine or imprisonment for five years, or both.

One-fourth of the fires of 1932 were caused by farmers and others losing control of their brush burning operations or failure to watch such burning until every spark was extinguished. Due to the fact that fires caused by brush burning can generally be traced to the responsible parties, the State has collected from them several thousands of dollars for fire fighting costs in the past two years. These funds are turned back to the State for fighting future fires during the same year.

Garrett county suffered the most through forest fires in the past year, when close to 4,000 acres were ravished by 175 fires. Severe losses were also felt in Allegany and Anne Arundel counties, each of which had over 1,500 acres burned. Prince George's county, with its numerous suburban homes surrounding the District of Columbia, is particularly subject to small fires and led the State in 1932 with a total of 193.

The marked improvement in keeping fires to small sizes, claims Mr. Besley, is due to quick detection through the State's lookout towers and the work of 650 forest wardens and almost 2,000 trained fire fighters working under them. Maryland is one of the few Southern States with the distinction of having 100% of its woodland under protection.

SENATOR J. ALLAN COAD AGAINFLAYSSTATEBUDGET

Charges Funds Have Been Used To Build Up Autocratic, Dangerous Political Machine

REBUKED IN PAMPHLET

Senator Joseph Allan Coad (Dem., St. Mary's county), continued his assault on legislative inaction and Governor Albert C. Ritchie's budget in the Senate and throughout the State last Thursday with a privately distributed pamphlet demanding that funds which "have for years gone to build up in this State an autocratic and dangerous political machine" be made available for the reduction of local tax rates.

Senator Coad's folder, entilted "A Word of Warning," a copy of which was received at The Republican office last Thursday morning, apparently was sent to members of the General Assembly on the heels of his denunciation of legislative lethargy of last Wednesday.

Asks 5 Percent Race Tax

Among other things, Senator Coad recommended a 5 per cent tax on pari-mutuel bets, the proceeds to be credited to the equalization fund to lower the present school rate of 67 cents.

"The people of Maryland," Senator Coad begins, "are at this moment threatened with the most serious situation ever yet encountered and which unless met by prompt and determined action by the people themselves at this session of the Maryland legislature, will result in the actual confiscation of not only thousands of small homes in the city but thousands of farms in the counties."

The senator blamed unemployment in the city and the low return for farm products for the existing crisis and continued:

"The cause of this menacing and appalling condition is twofold. First—due to unemployment in the city, many citizens who up until a year or two were self-supporting and prosperous, now find themselves unable to pay their taxes, in many instances compelled to resort to the charity of others in order to even live, whereas in the counties where farming is the chief source of revenue, the low return for farm products of any kind and all descriptions has virtually rendered hundreds of the State's most industrious and energetic citizens powerless to meet the actual needs of themselves and their families and pay their taxes.

"This is no idle assertion, but an actual fact.

The legislature now in session is the one and only source of relief and unless measures are adopted at this session that will beyond doubt and question lower the costs of State Government, and make available for the reduction of local tax rates, funds that have for years gone to build up in this State an autocratic and dangerous political machine, the conditions that will come upon us within the next two years will be worse than anything we have yet experienced.

"Through various and sundry agencies, namely the Farm Bureau, the State Grange, the County Commissioners' Association, the Maryland Tobacco Growers' Association and numerous associations of taxpayers more local in character, the people have appealed to the Governor of this State for relief. There was no criticism of what had been done, no censure of the Governor was indulged in, but one may look and he will look in vain from cover to cover of the Governor's message to the legislature for any suggestion or recommendation that does more than merely scratch the surface in the matter of tax relief.

The proposal to reduce the State tax rate by three cents through a substitution of the ½-cent grade crossing fund amounts to less than nothing to a people whose land is now assessed at four times its value, and whose products if grown at all must be grown at a loss, while the suggestion that tobacco (grown in three or four of the twenty-three counties of the State) be subjected to an additional tax, would be the rankest piece of sectional taxation ever undertaken by any State of the Union.

"The proposition also contained in the Governor's message that salaries paid to State employes be reduced ten per cent by 'voluntary contribution' without changing the said salaries in the budget is one of the most amazing and astounding proposals in my judgment ever made to any legislative body in the history of representative government on this continent.

"If salaries paid to State employes are to be reduced, whatever the reduction, then the said salaries should be shown as adjusted in the budget and not carried in the budget at one amount while another amount is to be paid. I submit that any such procedure as this would be unprecedented in the history of budget making in this State or any other State, and would render it impossible for the citizen or taxpayer to even know what was going on in the way of governmental costs.

"Furthermore a flat ten per cent reduction in salaries would be an unequaled and unjust method of distributing the burden, for the reason that a reduction of ten per cent in the case of an employe getting one hundred dollars per month would take away from that man or woman the necessities of life, whereas in the case of an employe drawing ten thousand dollars a year a ten per cent reduction in salary would only mean a little smaller bank deposit each month.

"Salaries paid to State employes should unquestionably be reduced, and it is my belief that they will be reduced, but they should be reduced in the budget by the legislature and not left to some one's whim or fancy or partiality, and they should be reduced in greater proportion in the case of the high salaried employe than in the ease of an employe who received merely enough to keep body and soul together.

"These three recommendations in the Governor's message then, the proposal to reduce salaries of State employes ten per cent (though asking that they remain in the budget without change from present levels) and the proposal to use the grade crossing fund derived from a ½-cent tax on gasoline for the reduction of the State tax by three cents, and the imposition of additional tax on tobacco products, constitute practically all of the tax relief program so far submitted by the Governor, and I say again that it doesn't even scratch the surface in this hour of vital, imperative need for reduction in governmental costs.

"This is not said by way of reproach or condemnation. I willingly concede that Governor Ritchie has done his best, probably as much as any other man situated as he is could or would have done.

"But emergencies are not to be successfully met by honeyed praise or cringing sycophancy, and if the people of this State or any portion thereof are going to allow this session of the legislature to adjourn without definitely and emphatically legislating those reforms and adjustments that only can bring the relief that is needed, then they must be willing to bear without complaint or murmur the hardships that will follow as sure as day follows night.

"This is no time for anything but straight thinking and plainest speech.

"A proposal has been made by those qualified because of their hand to hand contact with conditions in the various sections of the State to put all salaries of State employes back on a basis that obtained in 1924, at which time the average income of farmer and city man alike was greater than today, and to eliminate certain non-essential office holders. This proposal was met by the Governor in his message with the request that all salaries in the State budget be left exactly as they are, and that a 'voluntary contribution' would be expected from employes.

"A proposal has been made that the 1½-cent lateral road tax fund or at least a portion thereof be allowed to the respective counties for the use of local road needs, either in the form of debt service or county road bonus, or to replace the annual levy for county roads.

"The response to this request, so far as official statement is concerned, has been merely to say that whatever tax relief is to be allowed from this fund will be allowed for county road maintenance only, and that only as the State Roads Commission shall determine, which means less than nothing so far as actual relief goes.

"Any county should have the right, through its accredited road authorities, to determine for itself the use of this fund in a way that affords greatest relief in the way of tax reduction, so long as it is not diverted from road purposes, and 'road purposes' should mean in the present emergency, debt service on road bonds. In no other way can that degree of tax relief be afforded from this fund that the need of the people demands.

"The Governor and his supporters take the position that this is 'State money' and should be expended by State officials, disregarding, apparently, the fact that it was in most instances county or city money before it became the property of the State, and disregarding, too, the fact that in the present emergency county officials naturally are in a position to know how best tax relief may be secured to the people through the use of these funds.

Only recently a statement appearing in public print asserted that the 'Governor's program' provided for the use of lateral road funds for debt service on county road bonds in the respective counties, which is a deliberate attempt to mislead the public at the expense of veracity. The Governor, in his only so far official message, made no reference to the use of lateral road funds for this purpose nor has he yet done so. On the contrary, he definitely said that this fund was to be used, if used at all, by the county, for construction and maintenance and then only as the State Roads Commission might determine.

This does not and cannot afford the necessary relief from taxation that the situation most urgently demands. No one advocates taking away a single cent from the maintenance fund. Maintenance is a more or less fixed charge and cannot well be reduced at this time without adding to unemployment and detriment to roads already built.

The lateral road gas tax fund, however, presents no problem of this nature and should, in the present crisis, be placed at the service of the respective counties through their local Boards of County Commissioners or Roads Committees, to be used for road purposes only. That portion not used for debt service on county road bonds or county road maintenance to be expended as heretofore by the State Roads Commission for the construction of lateral roads.

"A statement also appearing in public print tells us that 'If a commodity tax is passed by the Legislature we estimate that the school tax, in St. Mary's county, will be reduced approximately 30 cents.' This, of course, is mere 'sop' to the unsuspecting taxpayer. The best that the Governor in his message was able to promise, in reference to the school tax of 67 cents in the Equalization Fund counties, was a seven-cent (7c.) reduction through reduction in school teachers' salarics, and some further possible reduction through the imposition of a tax on tobacco products, chewing gum and soft drinks. Certainly no one in Southern Maryland will approve a tax on tobacco, nor do I believe that those representing other sections of this State will wish to impose a tax that must of necessity be deterimental to an industry peculiar to one small section of Maryland.

"I mention this merely to point out the danger in a time like this of relying upon indefinite, irresponsible promises of tax relief.

"It is equally the duty of the legislative branch of State Government, along with the executive, to bring about real and actual remedy, nor should the present session of the Maryland General Assembly dare to adjourn without having gone the limit in the matter of tax relief. This can be done in no better way, in my judgment, than by first of all lowering the cost of State Government in every department, by actual reductions in budget items, by allowing to the counties the use of their respective portions of the lateral road tax fund for the reduction of road costs, and by the application of a 5 per cent tax on all parl-mutuel bets placed at the Maryland tracks, the proceeds to be credited to the Equalization Fund, thereby lowering the present school rate of 67 cents."

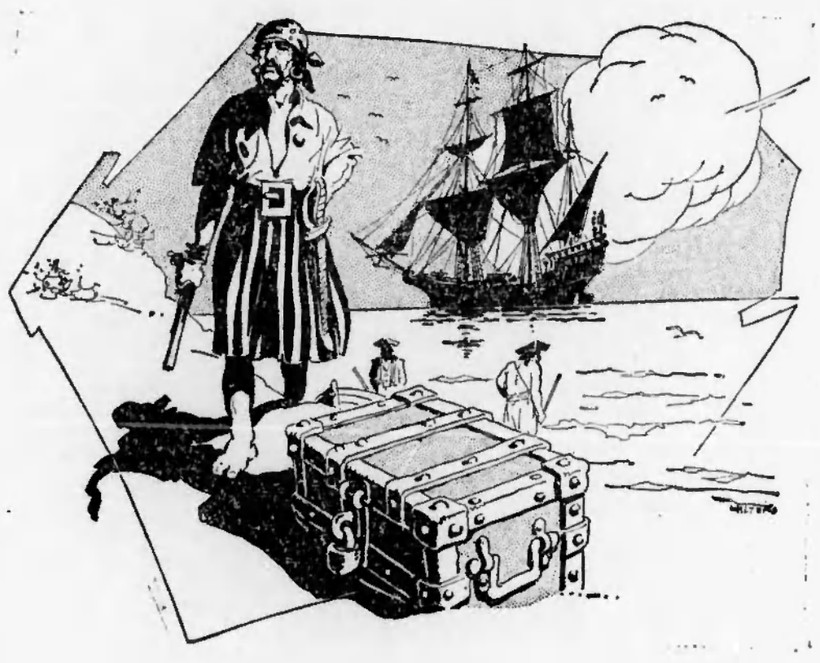
There's Buried Treasure IN Garrett County



The merchants who advertise consistently are finding it.

The people who take advantage of advertised products are discovering it.

It's a case of mutual satisfaction.

BUT FIRST

People must be told where and what the treasure is.

Mr. Business Man

You know that there is money in Garrett county, and that people will part with their treasures in exchange for your merchandise.

But they don't know what treasures are in your store. If you don't let people know what you have, they'll take it for granted you don't have it.

GIVE YOURSELF A FAIR CHANCE

Advertising is an investment without the danger of a stock market slump. It always pays big dividends when done consistently and intelligently.

Carrots A Winter Stand-By

Carrots are, or should be, a winter stand-by for the economical housekeeper. They are among the cheapest of the vegetables and can be used in a variety of ways. Like cabbage and turnips, carrots are often eaten raw, and in that form give their fullest food values.

Carrots in parsley butter, with lemon juice, are an especially attractive dish to serve with fish. Plain buttered carrots and peas, scalloped carrots and apples, are inexpensive, and carrots add food value as well as good flavor and texture to any vegetable stew, a New England boiled dinner, or a pot roast with vegetables. Carrot custard is another possibility, if eggs are available.

Carrots in Parsley Butter

Eight or 10 medium-sized carrots, ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ cup butter, 2 tablespoons lemon juice, 1 tablespoon finely chopped parsley.

Wash and scrape the carrots and cut them in slices, or dice them. Cook in a small quantity of boiling salted water for 10 to 15 minutes, or until tender, drain, add the butter, lemon juice, and parsley, and serve at once.

Scalloped Carrots and Apples

Arrange sliced cooked carrots and sliced raw apples in alternate layers in a greased baking dish. Season the carrots with salt and melted fat and sprinkle a little sugar over each layer of apples. Cover the dish and bake in a moderate oven for 30 to 40 minutes. Toward the last uncover the dish, add bread crumbs, and bake until crisp and brown. Serve in the baking dish.

Vegetables au Gratin

Mix two or more kinds of freshcooked or left-over vegetables such as string beans, carrots, and turnips or cauliflower, and place in a shallow baking dish. Pour over the vegetables thin white sauce to which cheese has been added. Cover with buttered bread crumbs and bake in a moderate oven until the sauce bubbles and the crumbs are brown.

Vegetable Curry

One-half cup rice, 1 cup diced onion, 2 cups diced carrots, 1 cup fresh or canned peas, 4 tablespoons butter or other fat, ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon curry powder.

Wash the rice and cook in 2 quarts of boiling salted water. Drain in a colander, pour cold water through, and let stand over steam until the grains swell and become seperate. Cook the vegetables in a small quantity of water and just before removing from the stove add the canned peas, or if fresh peas are available, cook them with the other vegetables. Use the liquid from the vegetables and add the fat, salt, curry and sauce. On a hot platter make a ring of the cooked rice, pile the vegetables in the center, pour over them the liquid mixture and serve very hot.

MT. LAKE PARK

Fiftieth Anniversary in the Park

Fifty years ago, when Garrett county was a youth of only ten years, Mountain Lake Park was but land acreage, used primarily to pasture droves of cows herded to the place from Oakland each morning and returned each evening. The ground now comprising the Park was covered with virgin timber where the giant oaks held their heads high above the jack and scrub oaks and alders, and "neither the sound of ax or hammer had been heard in the land."

It was in the summer of 1882 that the first program of the Mountain Lake Park Association was presented.

Immediately following the close of the season of 1882, the all-year-around residents, at a meeting called for the purpose, and held in the waiting room of the original Baltimore and Ohio depot, organized the first Sunday school, of whichh J. A. Enlow was elected superintendent and the late A. R. Sperry secretary. During the following summer the school met in the then newly erected auditorium and during that winter in the store room of Davis & Townshend. Then in 1884 the meetings were held in the dining room of the Mountain Lake Hotel, of which H. H. VanMeter was manager.

Just prior to the organization of the school the streets of the Park had been laid out as now located, but were then but mere trails from which the underbrush had been removed, but still with the stumps and roots of trees projecting far enough above the ground to rip and tear the long skirts of the women's dresses.

During 1882 a number of cottages were built. According to the recollection of Mr. J. A. Enlow the following were erected in that year: Rev. John Thompson (Deaconess Home); Miss Maggie S. Watson (Brooke Crest—Enlow); C. W. Conner (now Searle); G. W. Atkinson, former Governor of West Virginia, (now Wildman); Rev. E. W. Ryan (now Mobray); Dr. T. H. Logan (now Frame); Dr. Goucher; Dr. J. B. VanMeter (now Richards); Major J. C. Alderson (now Mrs. Ada Lee); Mrs. Rachel Hornbrooke (now W. L. Camden); Hon. G. C. Sturgiss (now Jennings); D. C. List (now Mrs. Kate V. Hardy); S. L. Allen (now Lew Stone); Rev. C. P. Masden (now Allenhurst); Mr. Alexander (now Haydenhurst); W. H. Gilbert; Weaver & Bardoll (now Russell heirs); C. M. Babb (now Fred. C. Fleming); Rev. J. C. Mulford (now Mrs. Simpson); Davis & Townshend (now Calhoun store); east end of Mt. Lake Hotel and part of the old auditorium, and Mrs. Elizabeth Carr, the mother of Dr. L. L. Carr, which cottage is still in the Carr family.

Much water has passed over the dam since the first meeting of the Park Sunday school and a long procession of those men and women in whom the missionary spirit predominated has wended its way to the Beautiful Isle of Somewhere. Few remain of the original band, but the work started half a century ago by these pioneers still bears fruit.

The paper, from which the above facts were garnered, was prepared by Mr. J. A. Enlow, who is still active in church work, and read at the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the M. E. church in the Park on last Sunday morning. Mr. Enlow has passed his eightieth year and has stored in his memory much valuable historical data which will probably be soon published in permanent form.

An Early Incident

One incident occurred at one of the early Christmas observances of the Sunday school which we would liked to have witnessed. And that was when F. E. Rathbun, now a learned educator, was rolled about the room in imitation of an immense snow ball. Just imagine!

BITTINGER

The warm air blows from out the south,
The cold air from the west,
But "hot air" boils from mortal mouth
When small men air the chest.

The tragedy of the week was the burning of the Lawrence Buckle home in this community last Tuesday afternoon. At the time of the fire Mr. Buckle was at his daily work on a local saw mill and in the afternoon Mr. Buckle's mother, Mrs. Alice Buckle, and his wife visited a nearby neighbor while the two small daughters were at school. The dwelling with all it contained was completely consumed by the fire and the loss was not fully covered by insurance, but fortunately a smaller house on the same farm was speedily put in order to house the family, thus lessening the inconvenience of its members.

The snow which fell in this community last Friday was swept into drifts by high winds on Saturday until some of the roads are now blocked.

Mrs. Lester Kisner, of Terra Alta, W. Va., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward S. Brenneman, of this village, was brought to the family home here one day early last week and the following day was conveyed to Memorial Hospital, Cumberland, where she underwent a successful surgical operation on Friday and at the last report she was recovering nicely.

DAZED HOLD-UP VICTIM FOUND WITH RELATIVES

Morgantown Man Discovered At Deer Park Last Week—Had Been Robbed and Beaten

CANNOT RECALL EVENTS

His mind seemingly clouded by a beating administered, Morgantown police believe, by three men who robbed him of $32 early last Wednesday morning, Gus King, 59, of Morgantown, is improving at his home but has been unable to give any definite information about either the robbery or the attack.

He was found last Thursday afternoon at the home of relatives near Deer Park.

His condition, officers were told, indicates he suffered a brain concussion when he was attacked and robbed.

King went to Cassville last Tuesday night to get $32.01 due him for mine work performed last November. He returned to Morgantown and met "Red" Harris. Both men were seen later at a dance hall and still later in another resort.

Lieut. Pickett, of the Morgantown police, picked up Harris and a Negro the following morning and took them to jail, where Harris is said to have made a confession, implicating another Negro.

King, he said, was attacked and knocked over an embankment, then robbed while unconscious. Thoroughly dazed, it is believed King wandered along the highway and M. and K. right-of-way toward Masontown and Kingwood. Sheriff Clarence Brown, Preston county, said he learned King spent Wednesday night at Terra Alta. From there he was followed to Oakland and finally to Deer Park, where he was found in a relative's home. He was unable to give a coherent account of his movements.

Harris and the two negroes, Pete Wilson and H. H. Callahan, are being held in jail. Wilson has admitted that he knocked King over the bank but did not, he says, get any of the man's money.

King says he remembers only that when he returned to Morgantown on last Tuesday he had a drink of liquor with Harris. He says he remembers nothing between the drink and his partial recovery at the Deer Park home. J. B. King, of near the Park, is a brother of the man.

Oakland has lost only five games this season and will be out to add another game to the win column on Thursday night.

Oakland defeated the Terra Alta Guards in the local gym on Tuesday evening, 24 to 20. Terra Alta led at quarter time 10 to 5, but in the second quarter Oakland gathered 13 points while holding the opposition scoreless, bringing the score to 18-10 at half time. The local team continued to lead at the third quarter 23 to 16.

CENSUS SHOWS 9,311 IN COUNTY UNDER NINETEEN

Figures Compiled Give Number Attending School 5,341

That there are 5,341 children under 19 years of age in Garrett county who are attending some school is shown in a census taken recently by the school teachers of the county and just compiled by the Board of Education.

The census is taken every two years by the teachers and is a State-wide requirement of the State Board of Education. The eensus was taken during the month of November and a rough compilation has just been eompleted by the attendance office in eonnection with the school system of the county.

The census also showed that there were 3,970 children in the county under and above the ages required in the school attendance law. This figure also included handicapped children. This makes a total of 9,311 children in the county under 19 years of age.

Of the 5,341 children in public and parochial schools, 2,774 are boys and 2,567 girls. This figure included those under 19 who are attending universities or normal schools. The number was an increase of 347 over the the figures of two years ago, or an average gain of 173 each year.

GAME FRIDAY MAY DECIDE CHAMPIONSHIP OF COUNTY

A Win for Oakland Will Cause Tie for First Place Honors

In a game which decided the Garrett county championship, Oakland and Friendsville High school teams will meet at the local gym on Friday evening. Oakland will be out to get an even break in the series, as they were defeated about two weeks ago at Friendsville, and Friendsville will attempt to make it two straight and the county championship. Should Oakland win there will be a tie for championship honors and a play-off will be necessary.

In preparation for the games on Friday evening, Friendsville teams defeated Green Street Junior High of Cumberland on Tuesday night 30-10 and 42-12, while Oakland High took the measure of the Kitzmiller teams at Kitzmiller 34-19 and 24-11.

Oakland piled up 27 points in the first half, Rice leading the attack with 19 points, and in the second half the Oakland substitutes carried on. Peddicord was the only Oakland regular to play the whole game.

Fraley's goaling featured the victory of the Oakland girls. The locals rallied to win in the final half after being held to a 11-11 eount the first half.

Goals were made as follows: Peddicord 5, Wolfe 1, Rice 8, Kerins 1; fouls, Rice 3-6, Davis 1-2. Others playing for Oakland but failing to score included Lohr and Compton, regular guards; and DeWitt, Yutzy, Turner, Wooddell, Hoye, Ray, and Spoerlein.

For Kitzmiller scoring was as follows: Walatkus 3, Bender 4, Barrick 1; fouls, Mosser 1-1, Barrick 1-3; Sowers 1-1.

Oakland was defeated at Davis on Saturday night 48 to 27.

Painfully Injured in Automobile Wreck

Mr. and Mrs. Stanton D. Whipkey and daughter May Orum, Mr. D. S. Davis, all of Oakland, and Miss Beryl Davis, of Elkins, West Va., sister of Mrs. Whipkey, are recovering from injuries when the Buick automobile of Mr. Whipkey in which they were enroute from Elkins to Oakland, skidded on the slippery road and went down a thirty-foot embankment on the highway between Thomas and Parsons, West Va., last Saturday afternoon. The automobile turned over at least twice, throwing Mrs. Whipkey out and clear of the wreck.

Miss Davis sustained a deep scalp wound and an injury to her knee. Mr. Davis was painfully bruised about his ehest, while the others of the party received numerous cuts and bruises.

The car was badly damaged.

Garrett County Man Has Eye Removed

Mr. Edward J. Hamill, city clerk at Kitzmiller, whose sight has been failing for a number of years, underwent an operation at a Baltimore hospital last Wednesday when his right eye was removed by a specialist. The sight of Mr. Hamill's remaining eye is seriously impaired.

FINDING A MARKET WILL DEPEND MUCH ON QUALITY

Only Quality Products Moving On Market at Present Time; Little Hope for Poor Stuff

A READJUSTMENT NEEDED

"Quality of product is going to be one of the major determining factors in finding a market for the farmers' agricultural commodities," stated J. H. Carter, county agent, this morning when asked what the farmers' outlook was for 1933 and the next few years.

Mr. Carter based his statement on the fact that only quality products are moving on the market at the present time.

"While quality products are being moved at a low price," Mr. Carter continued, "poor quality products cannot be moved at all. Quality is not only yielding greater return on the market but a greater return on production, and less labor per unit in production of live stock, farm products, poultry, etc.

"Producing quality is not accomplished overnight, as it requires a well thought out and planned program in selecting seed crops and in breeding of live stock," he emphasized.

Pointing out that producers who have quality products have found a ready market, Mr. Carter eited two cases in this eounty. E. F. Garletts and Howard Schlossnagle, of Selbysport and Accident, respectively, received orders for many times the number of bushels of potatoes they could supply just because it was shown in the Baltimore exhibit that their potatoes had quality. Others in the county having quality products have found a ready sale, and the same principle prevails in all other agricultural commodities.

Leading economists have considered the agricultural outlook for 1933 and have pointed out where adjustments are needed. Their outlook sees a low general price level, a low foreign and domestie demand and a disparity between prices and costs which includes high cost of labor and machinery, high fixed costs of taxes, debts, etc., high retail prices and eost of distribution and low price of farm products; more competition for quality and conservative credit policies.

Under adjustments needed they include less labor per unit of product, this to be gained by using good seed, better disease control, more culling of live stock and better care of good acres or animals; more home repair work; more retailing; production of high quality products, and under this head County Agent Carter recommends for Garrett eountians maple sugar and syrup, dairying, beef cattle raising with especial emphasis on the baby beef, potatoes both for commercial use and seed stock; raising of sheep, which also includes high grade wool and choice lambs.

Other adjustments included more living from the farm; increase in receipts from outside work; paying cash to get discounts; a plan and study of business, and working with the county agent, farm organizations and the Extension service.

The ladies of the local Presbyterian church will conduct a food sale in F. A. Smouse's store on Saturday afternoon, February 11, beginning at 2:30 o'clock.

TO MAKE CITY LOT INTO PLAYGROUND IS PLANNED

Legion Auxiliary Given Permission To Use Third Street Property For That Purpose

TOWN COUNCIL IN SESSION

That the Ladies' Auxiliary of the American Legion would make a number of tennis courts and a children's playground out of the town property at the north end of Third street was learned Tuesday morning from Mayor Grover C. Stemple, who stated that permission for this use had heen given by the Council at the regular monthly meeting on Monday evening at the City Hall.

Work upon this project will start as soon as weather conditions permit, it was stated. With the Boy Scouts planning to plant historic nut trees around the edges of the property this Saturday, as a community project for Scout anniversary week, the site may become one of Oakland's beauty spots in future years, providing all plans are earried out.

To Raze Building

Representatives of the G. S. Hamill estate were granted permission to raze the building on Alder street, now occupied by Swan's tailor shop. The ground is owned by A. T. Matthews and the building upon it by the Hamill estate. It is reported that there is a disagreement among the interested parties over some point and as a result permission was asked to tear down the house.

Judges and Clerks Appointed

Judges and clerks to conduct the municipal election to be held on Monday, March 13, were appointed by Council as follows: Michael Boyle, R. H. West, George D. White, judges; Mrs. Mary Bolden and Miss Elizabeth West, clerks.

At the election on March 13 three councilmen and the city treasurer will be chosen. The retiring councilmen are J. William Whorton, C. H. Browning and George Kerins, while Miss Franees Hamill will be the retiring treasurer.

Street Loan Paid

Final payment amounting to $1,500 was paid on the street improvement loan, which represents a total payment of $22,000 since the amiesite streets were laid and new pipe lines put in in eonnection with the permanent streets about four years ago. The final payment made a total of $3,500 paid during the fiscal year. The monthly bills, amounting to $2,600 in all, were ordered paid.

Lighting Contract Renewed

The contract for street lighting was renewed with the West Maryland Power Company. Other routine matters occupied the remainder of the meeting.

The next regular meeting of Council will be held on March 6.

To Hold Benefit Picture

The young men's class of St. Mark's Lutheran Sunday School will hold a benefit picture at the Maryland theatre on Wednesday and Thursday, February 15 and 16. The feature picture will be "The Phantom President," starring Claudette Colbert and George M. Cohan.

Admission will be 15 and 30 cents. Part of the proceeds will be used to apply on the church debt.

Groundhog's Predictions Are Being Realized

Gobbler's Knob, February 6.—Herr Groundhog seems to know his predictions, this year at least. Thursday, February 2, was cold but clear, an ideal day for the woodchuck to come out of his hole, gaze at his shadow and predict skating in March. He came out, as expected, saw his shadow and gave his usual predictions.

Friday was still eold and clear, as if to discountenance the sagacity and wisdom of the animal prognosticator. But, came the dawn. Saturday, to be exact. And it continued Sunday, and when the sun again came out on Monday there was no doubt left in the minds of Garrett eountians that there had been a real winter storm.

Which was just as expected by all good believers in Groundhog's Day. In fact tho groundhog himself was rather proud of the clearness of his shadow last Thursday.

"I haven't made a clearer one in many years, and it means there'll be skling in March," he chirped. "We have had a lot of unseasonable weather this winter. I can teii. It has been much warmer than normal, but there'll be a change soon and shorts will go into mothballs.

"There will be snow, mixed with rain and a lot of ice. Blizzards are due and winter will not only linger in the lap of spring, but it might chill summer's knees, too."

It was with these remarks that the gray-whiskered gentleman returned to his burrow to remain for another six weeks.

7 Below Zero This Morning

The cold wave was renewed yesterday about noon when snow began to fall and the mercury began to drop rapidly. By five o'clock yesterday afternoon about two inches of snow had fallen and the temperature stood at 17 degrees ahove zero.

The temperature fell to seven degrees below zero at Wesber's Government station during the night and around Oakland several thermometers registered 12 below. The government station recorded a snowfall of 2½ inches.

PYTHIAN ANNIVERSARY TO BE CELEBRATED

The night has also been designated as Ladies' Night and it is expected that a large number will attend. C. Thomas Summers, Frederick, grand chancellor of the order, will attend and the supreme vice-chancellor, Reno S. Harp, of Frederick, has been invited, as well as other grand lodge officers.

Harry Stemplpe, G. J. Altstetter, and Arthur Lawton were appointed as a committee on arraugements and a detailed program will be announced next week. Walter W. Dawson will act as master of ceremonies.

The K. of P. lodge was founded in Washington, D. C., February 19, 1864. The order is purely American and is the first fraternal society to be chartered by the Congress of the United States. Its jurisdiction is confined to the North American continent.

SCOUT ANNIVERSARY WEEK OPENS; WILL END MONDAY

Members of Local Troop Rededicated Themselves Last Night

Scouts of Oakland troop, No. 1, rededicated themselves to the Scout oath and laws at the initial meeting of Scout Anniversary Week held last night in the City Hall, the special observance being significant in that Scout troops throughout the country were engaged in the same ceremony at that time.

Harland L. Jones, chairman of the court of honor, spoke briefly on anniversary week, and George Altstetter, one of the charter members of Oakland troop and an Eagle Scout gave his views of scouting from the angle of one who had had time to reflect on his activities while a member here.

The celebration will continue with the regular weekly meeting on Friday evening, a scout mobilization and community good turn on Saturday morning; observing the 12th scout law, "A scout is reverent," by attending the M. E. church on Sunday morning when Rev. W. S. Patterson will speak, and concluding with a Father and Son pig roast in the basement of the Lutheran church on Monday evening.

A program is being arranged for that evening by scout officers. Rev. David C. Trimble will give the address.

To Assist Taxpayers In Filing Income Tax Returns

Deputy collectors of internal revenue have been assigned by Galen L. Tait, collector, and they will be at the following places for the purpose of assisting taxpayers in filling income tax returns for the calendar year of 1932:

Oakland, Feb. 24 and 25; Frostburg, February 27 and 28; Luke, March 1; Westernport, March 2; Lonaconing, Mareh 4.

Oakland is the only town in the county which the collector will visit, but the other towns named are nearby in Allegany county where Garrett eountians may also make their returns.

While in Oakland the collector will be at the postoffice.

BATTLE OVER GAS TAX DISTRIBUTION FORECAST

Both Administration and County Commissioners' Plans Have Strong Support

Annapolis, Feb. 8.—Both administration and anti-administration supporters expressed confidence their respective plans for distribution of the gasoline tax revenues would be accepted by the legislature, as the General Assembly adjourned today until tomorrow.

E. Brooke Lee, a member of the State Roads Commission and considered as general sponsor of the administration bill, was emphatic in his optimism of the number of votes in both the House and Senate the administration measure would win.

At the same time, H. Street Baldwin, author and the main sponsor of the county eommissioners' plan of gasoline tax distribution asserted he was convinced that the new administration plan, introduced in the House and Senate today, would not find enough support to carry it into enactment.

Speculation over which plan would find eventual approval was the main issue discussed by the members of the legislature today.

Baldwin pointed out the new administration measure would not grant to the counties absolute expenditure of the road fund, but that it would be left under the supervision of the State Roads Commission.

He asserted the administration measure should not receive as much support as the county commissioners' measure, since the latter proposal would, he said, give to the counties the largest amount of money to be spent by the county commissioners of the various counties, without any restrictions by the State Roads Commission.

It was pointed out by some county members that the provision in the new administration bill giving incorporated towns their proportionate share of the amount alloted the various counties would probably win a few county votes.

However, it was suggested by Mr. Baldwin at the meeting of county members he called last night, that he is willing to amend his bill so as to permit the incorporated towns to get whatever share of the funds apportioned to the counties have received in the past.

Only routine business was transacted in the House and Senate at their meetings today, the introduction of the administration bill for distribution of the gasoline tax becoming the center of interest.

The new administration distribution plan was introduced in both Houses, in the Senate by Senator L. G. Sasscer (Dem., Prince George's), and in the House by twelve delegates jointly.

In the Senate it was sent to the Finance Committee and in the House to the Ways and Means Committee.

Following the sessions of the Senate and House today committees were called into session to discuss measures before them.

The House Judiciary Committee heard representatives of a number of women's organizations enter their pleas for the enactment of the bill which would permit women to serve on juries in Maryland.

The House Committee on Ways and Means questioned Dr. Raymond A. Pearson, president of the University of Maryland, as to the recommendations carried in the budget for appropriations for that institution for the coming biennium.

Local Bill Introduced

In the House the Garrett County delegation introduced a measure prescribing the amount of money to be paid hy the County Treasurer to auctioners for crying tax sales.

The Committee on Ways and Means yesterday tentatively determined to drop from the budget appropriations for county fairs, for certain fire departments and to reduce sums asked for some of the institutions.

Dr. Cook, of the State Board of Education, indicated to the committee that one of the three white normal schools could be closed without serious impairment of the education program.

Bills to cut pay of judges of the State and to license professional men appeared in the Senate Tuesday

Lesson for February 12

JESUS TEACHING BY PARABLES —FOUR KINDS OF HEARERS

LESSON TEXT—Mark 4:1-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit: so shall ye be my disciples. John 15:8.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Story Jesus Told.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Right Way to Hear.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Hear.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Fruitful Christian Living.

In order to understand why Christ at this time began teaching in parables, we must consider the nature of the hour in his ministry. Opposition to him was becoming more definite and hostile. The parabolic method was not employed by Jesus until the rulers had set their hearts against him. When in the light of his wonderful works they turned against him and attributed his works to the devil (Mark 3:22), he denounced them in scathing terms and began to teach in parables in fulfillment of Isaiah 6:10.

A great multitude gathered to hear him at the seaside (v. 1), so that in order to escape the pressure of the crowd he was obliged to enter a boat. From the boat as a pulpit, he taught many things in parables. In the parable now under consideration, the sower and the seed are the same in all instances, but the results are entirely different. The difference lies in the condition of the soil. The central purpose of the teaching of this parable is to show that the results of preaching the Word of God depend upon the condition of the human heart.

I. The Wayside (vv. 4:15).

The wayside means not the road but the tract between the fields beaten down by the hoofs of animals and the feet of men. Because the soil was unbroken and uncultivated the seed could not get underneath the surface, and therefore was devoured by the fowls that came along (v. 4). The great truth taught here is that the heart unbroken and hard is not fit soil for the gospel. Such a heart it penetrates not, but lies loosely upon its surface. The gospel is not given recognition by such hearts as God's means for restoring them unto himself. Because of this condition the evil one finds some way to snatch away the truth (v. 15).

II. The Stony Ground (vv. 5, 6, 16, 17).

This means not stones mixed with soil, but stones with a thin layer of soil on top of them. With such condition the seed springs up quickly and likewise scorches quickly because it has not depth of earth. The great lesson is that hearts superficially impressed receive the word with joy, but when affliction or persecution arises, for the word's sake immediately they are offended. They wither away and die.

III. The Thorny Ground (vv. 7, 18, 19).

In this case the ground is good but has thorns in it. It is mellow enough and has sufficient depth but has not been cleared of the thorns. Such really hear the Word, but "the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful" (v. 19). The thorny ground hearers of this world are those,

1. Who are so immersed in worldliness, business and anxious cares that the good seed cannot come to fruitage.

2. Who are rich. Anxious care in business brings riches and the effect of riches is to blunt the spiritual perception of men and women, thereby rendering them unsusceptible to God's call to higher things in life.

3. Who are running after the pleasures of life. Many of the enjoyments of the world may be innocent in themselves but they attract so much attention and consume so much energy and time that Bible reading, meditation, and prayer are crowded out. All these things choke the Word.

IV. The Good Ground (vv. 8, 20).

This ground is different from all the rest. It is soft and mellow, and deep and moist. Therefore, it is capable of bringing forth fruit—some one hundred, some sixty, and some thirtyfold. This indicates that even the good ground, the honest hearers, gives forth different degrees of fruitfulness. In the measure that the heart is kept free from worldliness, riches, and pleasure, the good seed matures.

Continuing Love

One cannot think that any holy earthly love will cease, when we shall be like the angels of God in heaven. Love here must shadow our love there, deeper because spiritual.

Trust in God

God will not take away our immortality, because we have so little enjoyed the hope of it. Rest your head, childlike, on the one visible arm of the Paternal Deity, though you cannot see distinctly where the other and outstretched arm is pointing. That leads not wrong.—W. Smith.

The Sabbath

I feel as if God had, by giving the Sabbath, given fifty-two springs in every year.—S. T. Coleridge.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

Oh,—ho—hum, maybe it's the weather, but no matter what, I'm so sleepy I could crawl in between the sheets and oh, ho, hum, just snooze and snooze.

The telephone central just caught me a while ago as I was in the midst of a big yawn, "Number, please," she sweetly crooned, and I answered bravely "ooowman aaaaaa! ooooooo." I got the sheriff's office.

Oh, hum, it lingers so much my mouth looks like twins. Maybe it's all caused from last Friday. I was in the midst of my regular Friday daytime sleep, caused by Thursday's overwork in getting out The Republican and other publications, when somebody pounded on the door.

"I'll just let them pound," thought I. But is he a persistent cuss. I'll just holler out the front window. Still he doesn't pay any attention. Maybe if I pound on the porch roof he'll come out and then I can see whether he wants to sell something or give it away. I'll bet he has bare knuckles from so much contact with the door. The buzzer battery would be all worn out—if I had a buzzer.

Here he comes. I'll ask him nicely what he wants. What' the matter? Got cotton in your ears, mister? WHAT DO YOU WANT? Oh, if he'd only look up here. I can't wave my hands like a wild man very long, or my bathrobe will fall off. He's getting away and still he won't look. He's way up the road. I'll holler just once more. No, Mr. Falkenstein, I wasn't hollering for help. It's too late now. He's over the hill and gone. Maybe it's just as well but he sure spoiled my slumber.

But imagine my embarrassment when Hen McComas told me about the deaf and dumb man who had called at his home on Friday afternoon.

Oh, well, he had to buy needles, and I didn't.

We have not gone into the parasol business. But the other day Di-di Jim uncovered a big package of the fashionable sun umbrellas. At least they were fashionable at one time. Long handles, big top-knots, curved ribs, and all the latest colors. Don't be surprised to see Lizzie Tish, the office girl, or Mary Ann Small, the girl in the back office, dash out with one during a heavy March gale. Or you might even see me with one. I've got nothing against curved ribs and sech.

Suggestions for Children's Parties

Fruited Jelly—Make orange, grape, pineapple or any favorite fruit jelly. Mold attractively in tiny fancy molds, cups, orange skins or apple cases. All sorts of little fancy boxes may be purchased, lined with waxed paper and filled with gelatine mixture. Little boxes may be made of three lady fingers or three Nabiscos tied together with narrow ribbon.

Banana Boats—Remove a portion of the banana pulp—lengthwise of the fruit—and fill skin with a well-flavored gelatine jelly. When firm, add a little sail made of stiff paper fastened to a toothpick.

Flowers—Tiny flower pots may be lined with waxed paper and filled with jelly, ice cream or a sponge. Sprinkle top with sweetened cocoa and insert a real or an artificial flower.

Eggs—Make "Humpty-Dumpty" eggs by dipping hard-cooked eggs from which shells have been removed in mayonnaise to which a little liquid gelatine has been added to make it firm. Then decorate with cut pimentos, pickles or olives to form funny faces.

Duck Pond—Make an orange jelly and mold in large shallow cups or in saucers. Turn out on a plate to form the water on which a cookie or toy duck appears to float. Around the "pond" have ice cream or whipped cream. Green riced jelly may represent grass.

Goldfish.—Mold lemon jelly in glass sherbet cups. Insert a candy or toy fish so that it suggests a goldfish in a globe.

Chariots—Make a cart or chariot by scooping out an orange. With toothpicks fasten a slice of an orange (at least one-fourth inch in thickness, with peel on) on each side of chariot for wheels. Fill chariot with orange jelly, ice cream or marshmallows. The chariot is drawn by animal crackers fastened together—two by two—with toothpicks, leaving a little space between pairs, and attached to the chariot with ribbons for reins.

Marshmallows—These may be warmed in the oven and pinched in the shape of animals. Paint eyes, nose and mouth with vegetable colorings.

Potato Growers Warned Against Stem-End Disease

Potato growers of the State are advised to take precaution this spring against using seed infected with stem-end and vascular discoloration disease. This is one of the most destructive diseases with which the grower has to contend, it is pointed out by Dr. R. A. Jehle, specialist in plant pathology for the University of Maryland Extension Service. If there is the slightst trace of it in seed stock, he advises sale of the seed for table use and purchase of certified stock in its place. Dr. Jehle recommends use of Maryland certified seed stock, since by actual experiment it has proved best for this section.

Potato stem-end and vascular discoloration, while not confined to this State, provides plenty of trouble for Maryland growers and crops with from one-half to nine-tenths of the tubers diseased are not uncommon. The disease produces a band of dark brown or black tissue in the flesh of the potato about half an inch beneath the surface of the skin and gets its name from the fact that it begins at the stem end and spreads to the vascular tissue which is that portion of the potato conducting the food and water into the potato plant, including the tubers. There is always more or less waste in using a diseased potato, so the market value is reduced. As the disease may be carried over in the soil from one year to the next, it is of prime importance that careful rotation be carried out. If it is definitely known that potatoes with stem-end and vascular discoloration were grown in a certain field, this field should not be used for potatoes again for at least four years, as the disease has been known to live in the soil that long.

In purchasing certified seed the grower should make sure the seed has been inspected just prior to shipment since the disease may develop in storage. Maryland certified seed may be secured from a number of counties, information regarding which may be obtained from the local county agent.

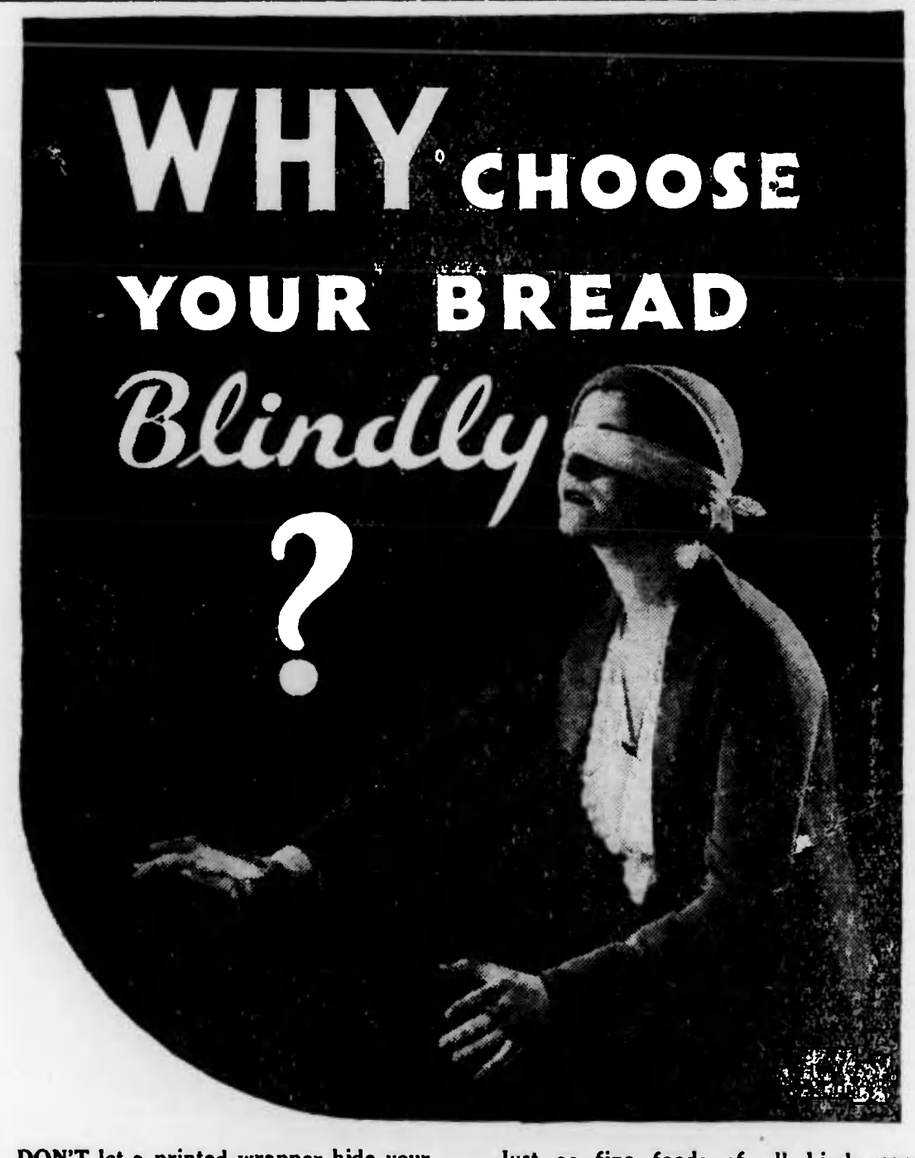
WHY CHOOSE YOUR BREAD Blindly ?



DON'T let a printed wrapper hide your most important food. Cellophane hides nothing. That's why we use it to wrap BLUE RIBBON. Cellophane preserves the rich, full wheaty flavor of natural flour—keeps bread oven-fresh. This is another reason why the Blue Ribbon Bakers chose it for their bread.

Just as fine foods of all kinds are packed in transparent packages . . . so, today, you'll find your best bread—BLUE RIBBON in this sparkling, transparent "showcase" wrapper. Demand it every time you buy bread!

ANY DAY IS A GOOD ONE FOR HEALTH RESOLUTIONS

Three Are Suggested That Make For Mouth Health In People

If you failed to make certain worthwhile resolutions at the beginning of 1933, don't wait until next year to make them, is the advice of Dr. Richard C. Leonard, Chief of the Division of Oral Hygiene of the Maryland Department of Health. "There are many resolutions worth making—and keeping," Dr. Leonard said, "for the sake of one's health, in which postponement may be dangerous. Three that make for mouth health are:

"1. To include in your diet those foods that protect against tooth decay and other mouth diseases.

"2. To visit your dentist at least twice yearly for mouth examination and the necessary correction of defects.

"3. To cleanse the mouth properly at least twice daily.

"The foods we eat make for or against mouth health. But protection through diet does not demand rare, expensive and unpalatable foods. All that is required is an adequate supply of the mineral salts and vitamins found in dairy products, whole grain cereals, green leafy vegetables and in fresh fruit juices. In addition, sunlight and cod liver oil are needed by the growing child. Your doctor will advise you in regard to the amount of cod liver oil required.

"The resolution regarding semi-annual dental visits should include a second one to look upon dental examinations and treatment as preventives of possible ill health rather than an unpleasant ordeal. Regular dental visits or early ones (at the very first sign of pain) will eliminate the too common and unfair dread of the dentist's office.

"A resolution to keep the mouth clean should be started by learning how best to do so. Ask your dentist how you should clean your teeth. Do not base your resolution to keep your mouth and teeth clean and healthy on faith in any particular tooth paste. Resolve to spend the time necessary twice daily for the proper mouth cleansing, so universally recognized as one of the important factors of mouth health.

"A fourth resolution is perhaps the most important. That is, to resolve to keep the other three throughout 1933 and the years to come. If you failed to make these resolutions on New Year's Day, make them now. Health does not recognize holidays. Any day is a good day to make health resolutions."

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

Sometime toward the latter part of the third century A. D. a learned Syrian named Ephraem refers to the Syriac version of the Old Testament and the New as "our vision," an allusion to the Bible in the vernacular of the Syrian people. This translation, called the Peshito, meaning plain, literal, was so called because of its fidelity to the Hebrew and Greek texts. It was most probably made in the second century. It is said to give an excellent rendering of the original, occasionally favoring some of the readings of the Septuagint.

In all probability the Syriac translation was made by a group of Jewish Christians. It extends over the Canonical books alone, and contains none of the additions to the Hebrew text found in the Septuagint. The British and Foreign Bible Society had an edition of the Peshito Bible published for the use of the Christians of Malabar. This edition was prepared by Prof. Lee, who collected several manuscripts for the purpose. It appeared in London 109 years ago.

As Christianity spread throughout portions of Italy in the first century, and in Northern Africa, where Latin was the spoken and written language of the educated, it was to be expected that the Bible would at a very early period be translated into Latin.

We accordingly find that a version in that language called the Itala was made about the middle of the second century. It was a translation of the Old Testament from the Septuagint. In the time of Augustine many translations of the Old Testament existed, but he preferred the Itala to all others on account of its close adherence to the letter as well as the clearness of its language.

Jerome undertook a revision of the many Latin texts existing in his day, but the great part of the revision perished during his life.

While Jerome lived in Bethlehem he made a Latin translation of the Old Testament from the Hebrew text. This was between 392 and 405 A. D. His profound knowledge of the Hebrew, derived from the rabbis, his acquaintance with previous Latin versions and his critical judgment and carefulness, admirably fitted him for his task. At first his work met with great opposition, as might have been expected from its many departures from the existing Latin version; but it gradually came into use, so that in the seventh century its authority was recognized by the Western Church, and under the name of Vulgata (Vulgate) it is still considered by the Church of Rome as a standard authority.

GUNS, BUT NO SHOES

Russia's five-year industrial plan as a military measure was a success, according to Dictator Stalin; but while the factories were producing "on a mass scale all the weapons of defense," the great majority of the people went through two Russian winters without shoes. Stalin admitted in a recent address, of which an official copy was delivered to the Associated Press, that "in order to change over to a basis for producing defense materials, many of our factories were forced to go out of operation for four months."

Reports from neutral observers are to the effect that among these factories were the ones where shoes for the people were manufactured. Admitting this shortage in shoes, and clothes also, Stalin made the following excuse: "We all know we have produced less than was needed, resulting in well-known difficulties, but consider the consequences of postponing our heavy industrial production in favor of making more shoes, clothes and other articles of consumption." Further along he says, "That is why the party was compelled to lash the country."

During this same period, while the country was lashed to greater production of war material, grain was forcibly taken from the peasants in the great wheat-growing districts in order to feed the industrial workers. The country was stripped bare and the peasants who had produced the grain left to starve. A cable reproduced in the Literary Digest asserts that "practically all Russia's peasant class is forced to 'steal' the products of his own labor in order to survive."

So great became the distress in the Ukraine, the great wheat belt of Europe, that 1,000,000 inhabitants fled from that section to other parts in search of food. The farms where the wheat was raised were so stripped bare by the government agents, collecting for the industrial districts, that those who grew the wheat were left without a single bit of food to feed them through the Russian winter and until a new harvest should ripen.

Evidently the dictatorship of the proletariat is the dictatorship of the industrial districts. The only use to which these defensive weapons have been put is to keep under complete military surveillance the Russian peasants who are deprived of the food they raise.

KEY TO PROSPERITY

Secretary of Commerce Chapin hits the nail on the head when he says that work is the key to prosperity. He calls upon national business leaders to unite in a cooperative program for "vast re-employment of labor." He sees substantial grounds for a moderate, seasoned hopefulness for business revival. The reasons he gives are the need for replacement of obsolete equipment, exhausted and deteriorated stocks of goods and a desire to buy if "even a slight increase in the workers' incomes can be brought about, or if the present hesitancy can be replaced by a more hopeful, resolute mood."

This may sound like the philosophy of an optimist, but Secretary Chapin never prestended to be anything else. He has always looked upon the sunny side of life and when the turn comes, as it must some day, he will have the satisfaction of knowing that he has been consistent. On the whole, his state of mind is to be preferred to that of the prophets of gloom who would have us turn into a nation of crepe hangers.

TO HELP AGRICULTURE

The United States Bureau of Agricultural Economics "said a mouthful" the other day in its annual Farm Outlook report when it declared that Improved demand for farm products waits on the recovery of industry, and especially the heavy basic industries in the United States. In other words, until the millions of idle men in our country are once more employed in the steel mills and other industries, including the mines, the railroads, automobile factories, and so on, there will be no recovery on the farms.

When this fact comes to be more generally realized in the United States we will have more action and less theorizing, and then we will be on the way to recovery. Most of our agricultural products are consumed in America. The way to increase consumption therefore is to start the wheels going as soon as possible. When the average American worker is employed he spends his money on substantial foods, on beef, pork, butter, eggs, poultry and other agricultural products. So long as this American worker is not employed at good wages we are not going to have a return of prosperity.

All of the theorizing about foreign markets, the inflation, is not going to cure this condition. We are going to have to forget our foreign markets and pay more attention to America and its possibilities.

Just now many of our industries are sadly crippled because other nations—Japan and Czecho-Slovakia are good examples—due to depreciated currency are dumping their products in the United States and causing American labor to suffer. The internationalists' remedy is to encourage more importations on the theory that this will sell our farm products abroad. The fallacy of this theory is self evident. The average Oriental coolie lives on a cup of tea and a few handsful of rice a day. How important is his food to the American farmer when compared with what the American worker will consume if steadily employed? The answer to this question is so plain that even an internationalist ought to be able to get it.

Just as wild is the theory of the inflationist who thinks that because some of these foreign nations have debased their currency and now pay their workers with tin money, that Uncle Sam could help himself by doing the same thing. The final result would spell ruin to all Americans whether they live in the city or the country, whether they work in the factory or on the farm.

The first thing to be done is to shut out this flood of foreign goods which has been made possible by the use of cheap money abroad and the further impoverishing of the working classes. When this is done we will be on the road to recovery and can look to the future with more confidence. International bargaining and inflation will not do the work. What is needed is a little straight American thinking.

IN DAYS OF OLD

FORTY YEARS AGO

The reported discovery of gold on the farm of G. W. Delawder proved to be nothing but "iron pyrites," called fool's gold in all countries.

Baltimore and Ohio receipts for passenger travel to Mountain Lake Park during the 1892 season were $17,000.

The late rise in the waters of the Youghiogheny River was sufficient to allow logs to be floated to the saw mills along the stream. The Offutt mill, west of Oakland, had a run of logs that made two million feet of lumber.

Henry Weber purchased an extra boiler for his hot houses and also a steam pump for forcing water from the river to a reservoir.

Lily Division, No. 9, Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, was instituted in Oakland with Dr. Henry W. McComas, captain; E. M. Spedden, first lieutenant; W. S. Dunlap, herald; S. Lawton, treasurer; J. S. Meyers, recorder. Following the institution of the company the members partook of a dinner served at the West Hotel.

An account was given of the lost silver mine wherein a man by the name of Layman, while hunting deer, became lost. He found silver when he pulled up a young haw tree in his wanderings, but when he finally returned to his home and afterward made an effort to find the spot again he was unable to do so. Shortly after the Silver Bell Mining Company was formed.

TWENTY YEARS AGO

Vice-President Thomas Marshall and family engaged quarters at Deer Park Hotel for the summer and the hotel manager was trying to book President Wilson and family for the season.

Edward Chance was severely bruised when he was caught by a falling tree on the Cuppett farm.

The ice harvest at Mountain Lake Park was on in earnest, from five hundred to seven hundred tons being shipped daily.

In a railway collision at Gorman, on the Western Maryland Railroad, David Stewart was killed.

Paul Neville, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Neville, had both bones of his left leg broken when he was thrown from a horse which had slipped and fallen on some ice.

Arthur Townshend was making needed repairs before moving from the First National Bank building to the Townshend building on Alder street.

The Princess Stock Company closed a three nights' engagement at the Maryland Theatre.

RETRENCHMENT IN STATE EXPENSES INSISTED UPON

Coad Takes To Task Those Who Fear to Cross A "t", Dot an "i" or Change a Figure in Budget

OPPOSED TO SALES TAX

Annapolis, Feb. 8—Demanding "more economy and less taxes," Senator Joseph Allan Coad (Dem., St. Mary's), today continued his campaign for a reduction in Governor Albert C. Ritchie's budget recommendations, issuing a new pamphlet outlining his views.

In today's pamphlet, the senator defended his demands for budget reductions and assailed what he described as "the sales tax racket," which he hinted may be "fostered and fomented by large out-of-State mail order houses."

Senator Coad said:

"There are those who have manifested resentment that anyone should undertake to cross a single 't' or dot an 'i' or change a single figure of the budget, which, of course, implies to the budget a degree of perfection that even its author would be slow to claim and who pretend to see in any effort to reduce the appropriations an attempt to 'embarrass the governor' or 'to impair the efficiency' of the State's government.

Considers Resentment Silly

"As one of those who attaches no measurable degree of sacredness to the handiwork of any man, and who can not bring himself to believe that all the wisdom and ingenuity and ability regarding the fiscal policy of the Maryland State government resides in one individual, I feel that this attitude of resentment is silly and illtimed, besides being just a little bit unfair to those members of the General Assembly who even though not supermen, are nevertheless striving to do their plain duty to their constituents, the taxpayers of this State."

Senator Coad's pamphlet, distributed to members of the Assembly, was the second which the St. Mary's Democrat has broadcast during the present session. State House observers saw in the first a semi-insurgency against the administration, a fact which Senator Coad later denied upon the Senate floor.

"To speak of the increased cost of government in Maryland," the pamphlet went on, "is not to cast the slightest reflection on any one State official. Should not retrenchment now be the order of the day rather than an effort to find new and added sources of revenue?

Cites Increase Cost of Government

"Some idea of the increased cost of government in Maryland may be obtained by comparing the budgets of 1919 and 1933. The former carried total appropriations of $17,289,429, while the latter called for a total expenditure of $38,073,477, and, in the same period it should be remembered that the bonded indebtedness of the State rose approximately 33 1-3 per cent, or from $19,106,290.70 (Sept. 30, 1919) to $29,707,913.36 (Sept. 30, 1933), and this, let it be remembered, in spite of the economies and benefits that were effected through the reorganization process of 1922, by which the various and sundry boards and bureaus, commissions and departments were regrouped in the name of efficiency and economy.

"If this is not a fact, then it should be branded as a falsehood."

Assails Sales Tax

Saying that now was the time to face the facts, Senator Coad turned to the question of a sales tax.

"There is going to be quite an active campaign designed to inaugurate throughout the State of Maryland a so-called general sales tax. Governor Ritchie has stated that he did not believe the people of Maryland favored this and in this statement he was exactly 100 per cent correct.

"To just what extent this movement is being fostered and formented by large out-of-state mail order firms, it is, of course, impossible to estimate. Certainly within the state it is being encouraged by a great many well-meaning, sincere and honest persons, to whom in all fairness must be accorded the purest and most unselfish motives.

"If additional revenue to this state was imperative, the sales tax racket might have some merit, but certainly the imposition of such a tax at this time cannot be justified upon any ground other then the most urgent and imperative state need for new revenue and that most emphatically does not exist.

"It will be well to remember in considering the imposition of any commodity or general sales tax, that business today is barely holding its own, in many cases not even doing that, because of the decreased purchasing power of the people, and any added tax upon it can and will only serve to retard business revival and recuperation already too long delayed.

Retrenchment His Watchword

"Retrenchment in state expenditures should be the watchword, not new revenue.

"The need for State aid to Baltimore City to carry on relief work is of course a need that no patriotic citizen of the State can afford to discount or ignore. The city's credit limitation has, it is said, been reached. The present plan is to lend the State's credit to the city to the extent of eight million of dollars, nearly one-half of which is necessary to liquidate loans already secured and spent.

"It is, of course, easy to mortgage the future, and the bond issue route is the usual way. In the establishment of what virtually amounts to a dole system for the city, existing current revenues due to the city from the State should be made to go as far as it is possible to make them go, before resort to bond issues is had if the State is to underwrite them, and the State should first of all be satisfied that the municipal budget has been brought down to the very lowest possible figure.

"Governor Ritchie has suggested an increase in the city's share of the 2-cent maintenance and reconstruction gasoline tax which if favorably acted upon by the Legislature would mean, as he pointed out in his message, an estimated increase in the city's revenue for 1934 of $728,500.00, and for 1935, $767,700.00. Whether or not this increase in revenue could be properly utilized for city relief work, certainly it should be taken into consideration."

Fairmont Wins Over Bayard

Fairmont Business College nosed out the Bayard Eagles in a game played in the Oakland High gym last Friday evening, 34 to 33. Fairmont led throughout the game but never by more than six points. Bayard had a good chance to tie the score as the final whistle blew but Funk missed one of his free throws. The quarter scores were 8-5; 20-15; 31-26. Blackburn and Funk led the Bayard scorers.

The land is situated in Dry Fork district between the towns of Evenwood and Glady, on the east side of Glady Fork.

CLAIMS STATE'S CLIMATE IS ONE OF BEST IN THE U. S.

Meteorologist's Pamphlet Lauds Year-Round Conditions in Maryland; Notes Mild Winters

COUNTY RECORDS GIVEN

The all-the-year-round climate of Maryland is one of the best in the United States, according to John R. Weeks, meteorologist of the Baltimore Weather Bureau.

He sets forth this opinion in a pamphlet, "Our Climate," a copy of which was recently received at The Republican office.

Although winters are mild, they are not without invigorating qualities. Zero weather, he states, has been recorded in Baltimore only twenty times in the past sixty years, and the lowest temperature during that period was 7 degrees below zero.

From its geographic position Maryland is "decidedly favorable for a uniform and abundant supply of moisture for all purposes." The annual precipitation averages 40.93 inches in the State.

Sees Sun 322 Days In Year

While a typical Baltimore day is one on which the sky is partly covered with clouds, the sun shines here "during some portion of the day" on about 322 days in the year. The "frost-free period, or "growing season," for the eastern portion of the State averages about 180 days annually.

Probably no body of water of equal area within or touching the United States is so free from dangerous winds as the Chesapeake Bay," Mr. Weeks stated.

The circumstance which makes for this condition is the fact that the Eastern Shore forms a wide windbreak; that the bay is pocketed from the Atlantic Ocean and connects with it at a right angle, and the average width of the bay, 15 miles, is not favorable for the attainment of high-wind velocities.

Sea-food industries flourish and are of great importance to the State, one-third of the total oyster production being furnished for the United States from this body of water.

Called "Yachtsmen's Paradise"

Serenity of the bay waters, according to Mr. Weeks, has brought the Chesapeake to be known as "the yachtsmen's paradise."

Mr. Weeks also discussed Baltimore's position as an aviation center.

All the factors to be considered in locating aviation enterprises are favorable in Maryland, and "while high latitudes have the advantage of least distance to travel the intermediate routes leading to Baltimore show the best weather conditions."

Local Weather Conditions

The average annual precipitation in Oakland is 46.2 inches, and the average annual unmelted snowfall 68. The annual mean temperature is 47 degrees. The highest ever recorded in Oakland is 101 and the lowest 40 degrees below zero. The average summer temperature for Oakland is 65 degrees and the average winter temperature is 29.

Four weather reports are kept in Garrett county and they are by Ralph E. Waber, Oakland; Joab J. Friend, Friendsville; Floyd J. Miller, Grantsville, and C. E. MacMurray, Sines.

The average annual precipitation for the four Garrett county stations is 42.56 inches; the average annual temperature, 48.1; the annual mean maximum temperature, 59.3; the average mean minimum temperature, 37 degrees.

The average date of the last killing frost in spring is May 22, while the average date of the first killing frost in Autumn is September 25. The average length of the growing season in Garrett county is 126 days. The latest date of a killing frost in spring is June 24, while the earliest date of a killing frost in autumn is August 21.

The average annual snowfall in Garrett county is 64.2 inches, while the largest amount for any one month is recorded at Grantsville, during January, 16.7 inches. On an average of 140 days there is a precipitation of 0.01 inch or more.

Committee Assignments in the House of Delegates

The attention of The Republican has been called to an unintentional error made in a recent issue in which it was stated that Delegate Fike was assigned to but one commmittee of the House and Delegate Cullers received no committee assignments. This information was gleaned at the time from the announcement of committee assignments appearing in the Baltimore Sun. Recently The Republican has received an official list of the committee assignments announced by the Speaker of the House. Mr. Cullers is a member of the elections, library, manufacturers and printing committees, while Delegate Fike is a member of the currency, pensions and railroads and canals committee.

The Republican is glad to make the correction.

Car Goes Over On Side

Mr. Jo.s E. Harned, accompanied by Mrs. Harned, left Oakland Tuesday morning for Baltimore, returning yesterday afternoon, accompanied by Mrs. Harold H. Harned and infant daughter, Helen Louise.

What might have been a sad homecoming for the group was providentially averted. Nearing Hancock on the return trip, the car struck a slippery place in the roadway and after skidding a few yards fell over on its side. Fortunately nothing worse than slight bruises to the occupants resulted. The car was damaged to some extent, a fender being twisted and the glass shattered in two windows.

The accident occurred at a point where a number of road men were engaged at work and they assisted Mr. Harned in righting his car and sending him on his way homeward.

Frank Cox, of a publishing house, initiated a campaign for the selling of magazines by students of the school, the funds to be devoted to the school organizations. All students are eligible to join. Virginia Fraley is president of the sales organization, which is divided into two groups, directed by a vice-president of each group.

Waive Hearing Charged With The Theft of a Somerset County (Pa.) Steer

Said to have confessed to the stealing of a steer from a farm in Somersen county, Pa., four months ago, three men waived a preliminary hearing last Thursday before a justice of the peace of that county and were committed to jail at Somerset to await the next term of court in that town.

Benjamin Fike, 44, and Wm. Jenkins, 48, both of Friendsville, were arrested last Wednesday charged with having committed the offense. The third member of the trio, Rush Kuhlman, 28, of Rockwood, Pa., said to be a brother-in-law of Fike, was arrested in the same connection at his home Thursday morning.

Police accused the trio of having killed a steer on the farm of William Gindlespeager, near New Centerville, Pa., on October 22. They stated that the beef had been trucked across the State line to Fike's home in Friendsville.

Central High, Lonaconing, Takes Pair From Friendsville

Central High of Lonaconing defeated Friendsville High school teams last Thursday evening, the girls winning 45 to 8, while the boys won 34 to 23.

G. Coddington scored five double deckers for the Friendsville team. The Garrett county team led at quarter time, 9 to 7, but Central forged to the front at half time 22 to 10 and held the long end of a 28-19 score at the close of the third period.

The girls' lineup for Friendsville included Fike, Jenkins, Barnes, Frazee, Garletts and DeWitt, with Railey as a substitute.

The boys' lineup included McCullough, G. Coddington, Selby, VanSickle and R. Murphy, with R. Coddington and Eisentrout as substitutes.

Two Alleged Bootleggers Arrested and Held For Court

William Karalivitch, Finzel, Garrett county, was arrested Saturday on charges of a sale of liquor after he had filled an order for two gallons of whiskey placed by an agent. He was held for the Garrett county court under bond of $500.

An order for one gallon was also placed with Thomas J. Johnson, of Frostburg, for delivery near Finzel, and when the alleged bootlegger appeared with the merchandise he was arrested and also held under bond of $500 for the Garrett county grand jury, agents stated.

:: The Great Emancipator ::

THE MAN WHO WAS BORN in A LOG CABIN

HE WAS born in a one-room cabin in the backwoods of Kentucky, and died in a tiny bedroom in a boarding house at the nation's Capital, while President of the United States.

He never had all-told more than a year's schooling in the most elementary subjects, yet he lived to write impeccable English, and to be judged by learned professors as master of purest literary style.

He grew up far removed from cultural influences and the niceties of polite society, yet wooed and won in marriage a Kentucky aristocrat, a society belle, and an accomplished linguist, Miss Mary Todd.

He never had the heart to kill any living thing, looked with disfavor on fire arms, but became by virtue of his high office, the commander-in-chief of the Union forces in a war which resulted in half a million slain.

He was smooth shaven for fifty-one of his 65ty-six years, and grew a beard the winter before his inauguration, in good-natured compliance with the suggestion of a little girl who thought the change might improve his looks.

He was a voracious reader as a boy and young man, borrowing many a treasured volume, but he never owned a library of as many as a hundred volumes, excluding his law books.

He did not unite with a church, though he was a frequent attender; sometimes called a "free thinker," he was unusually familiar with the Bible and during his Presidency, on his own confession was a praying man.

He Was a Voracious Reader.

* * *

He was often of a melancholy mood, subject to seasons of gloom and grief, yet was as often buoyant, laughing heartily over a good joke and told droll stories intimitably.

He loved greatly all children, and was most indulgent with his own, permitting "Tad" to make a play room of his office in the White House.

He never could wear gloves with ease; formal society functions bored him, and at his first inauguration he was puzzled as to the disposal of his gold-headed cane and high hat—until his great protagonist, Stephen A. Douglas, came to his relief.

He wrote a neat hand, devised clear and unInvolved sentences, avoided big words, never padded his speeches, was frequently laconic and pointedly brief.

He was fond of poetry, wrote verses of a homely sort and liked best poems of a somber or pathetic appeal, as for example, "The Last Leaf" and "O Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud?"

He observed the faults and foibles of his friends and associates, but seldom commeated upon their shortcomings and never rebuked them either in public or private; for a notable instance—William H. Herndon and his intemperate habits.

He revered George Washington, admired Thomas Jefferson, at one time idolized Henry Clay, read with avidity the speeches of Daniel Webster.

He numbered among his friends an unusually large company of ministers of the Gospel, yet when he ran for President, only three of the twenty-odd ministers in Springfield voted for him.

He loved to sit with the "boys" about the stove in the village store on winter evenings, crack jokes, and listen to the gossip of the neighborhood, delighted in minstrel shows, was tickled by the antics of clowns and comedians, thought a traveling circus was great fun.

He had one of the best "forgetteries" of all our public men, thus he "forgot" the shabby treatment he received at the hands of Edwin M. Stanton in Cincinnati, 1855, and appointed him secretary of war in his cabinet.

He was indifferent as to his personal attire, yet was distinctive in his choice of a high topped hat, long-tailed coat, and a black bow tie, worn around a low turned-down collar.

He was in life mercilessly criticized, treacherously misrepresented, cruelly maligned, and basely slandered, and in death he was all but deified.

He was scrupulously honest, long suffering, and patient beyond most mortals, magnanimous and just, forgiving, and a stranger to hate.

He was not a demigod, but very human; he made mistakes and profited by them; he was a lover of his kind and made generous allowance for the imperfections of humanity, and because of these all too rare virtues "Now he belongs to the ages."—Detroit News.

Abraham Lincoln Always Of, By and For the People

"So long as there is a man willing to work, but unable to find employment, the hours of labor are too long."

The words quoted above are not those of a modern-day economist; they came from the mind and lips of one who long ago had his finger on the pulse of American affairs. He came from the people and rose to high estate and esteem by mere force of character and indomitable will. He was more self-educated than learned. He held no degree from a great university; he discovered no new planets; he flew no oceans; he amassed no colossal fortune. Yet he did, at a time when it required a degree of courage rare in history, stand firm for his convictions. Class meant little to him beyond a division set aside for self-centered ends. He was of, by and for the people.

He had visions, yet was not visionary. His judgment may not have been infallible, yet it was based on logic and foresight. His work was arduous, yet he never turned aside. Hard labor was his portion in early life, his choice later. Of lowly origin, he rose to heights never dreamed of. Outwardly uncouth, perhaps, but polished as the finest steel beneath. Rough at times, perhaps, yet tender as a woman to those in distress, he who spoke the words quoted saw far into the future and the thought came from the heart. He was the workers' friend.

He is so still. As long as the world exists, down through the ages will reverberate Abraham Lincoln's forceful words of consolation and encouragement to all who earn a livelihood by the sweat of the brow. The world may never see his like again, but his memory will never perish.

Stand with anybody that stands right. Stand with him while he is right and part with him when he goes wrong.—Lincoln.

Slaves Freed January 1, 1863

The proclamation of emancipation, which freed all the negro slaves, was proclaimed by Lincoln, September 22, 1862, and became effective January 1, 1863.

ANTHOLOGY of LINCOLN

By MINNA IRVING

A BEACON on the mountain height
Where Freedom waves her banner bright,
A clear, serene and steady light.

A hand that reaches from the dust
And writes for us in God to trust,
And be both merciful and just.

A soul that lives to cheer and bless
The student in his loneliness
And point the pathway to success.

A spirit humble, yet divine,
That poured its essence superfine
Unstintedly at Freedom's shrine.

A broad humanity to all,
A love embracing great and small,
A sword, a flame, a bugle call.

A heart of faith inviolate,
A voice immortal in debate,
A lighthouse to the ship of state.

A name undimmed as years go by,
A glory that will never die,
A star eternal in the sky.

His natal day from sea to sea,
Lord God, we render thanks to Thee,
For Lincoln and his memory.

Mary Todd Lincoln, Wife of Emancipator

This newly discovered portrait study of Mary Todd Lincoln, wife of Abraham Lincoln, is the work of Daniel Huntington and constitutes a distinct contribution to the nation's Lincolniana. Mrs. Lincoln, the daughter of Robert Smith Todd, was born in 1818 at Lexington, Ky., and died in 1882, seventeen years after the assassination of the President.

Fort Stevens, Where Lincoln Saw Battle

In Georgia avenue, near Walter Reed hospital and not many miles from the White House, is a small but neatly kept cemetery. It is a grim reminder of the trying period during the Civil war when the Confederates were almost in sight of the Capitol.

Fort Stevens Cemetery.

Here rest 40 soldiers who fell in the battle of Fort Stevens on that occasion. Fort Stevens, which stood not far from this cemetery, was one of the hastily thrown up chain of small forts which encircled the city. It was the only one of the local forts that figured in a battle during the War of the Rebellion. It was here that President Lincoln exposed himself to fire to watch the engagement. He exercised his prerogative as commander-in-chief of the army to do so after General Wright ordered him to retire from danger.

LINCOLN'S IDEA ON HOLDING PROPERTY

PROPERTY is the fruit of labor. Property is desirable. It is a positive good to the world. That some should be rich shows that others may become rich, and hence is just encouragement to industry and enterprise. Let not him who is houseless pull down the house of another, but let him work diligently and build one for himself, thus by example assuring that his own shall be safe from violence when built.—Abraham Lincoln.

STATE'S FIRST PROMOTION TRACT

RECENTLY FOUND DOCUMENT WAS ISSUED JUST 300 YEARS AGO

By
HESTER DORSEY RICHARDSON,
In the Baltimore Sunday Sun

Lord Baltimore's first step toward settling his new province, after the signing of the charter by King Charles I on June 20, 1632, was to secure one of the King's own ships, which he renamed the "Arke of Maryland." Then, having his Charter and his ship, the young Baron of Baltimore and Lord Proprietary of Maryland issued in printed form his first bid for Colonists, entitled, "A Declaration of the Lord Baltemore's Plantation in Maryland"; a reprint going on to state that therein was set forth "how Englishmen may become Angels, the King's Dominions be extended, and the adventurers attain Land and Gear; together with other advantages of thnt Sweet Land." This tract was dated February 10, 1633.

This priceless first Maryland promotion tract remained unknown to Maryland historians almost until the three hundredth anniversary of its publication in London. Several years ago it was located by Willard A. Baldwin, of New York and Baltimore, in the archives of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Westminster. Through the courtesy of the Cardinal Arehbishop of Westminster, a facsimile copy was acquired by Mr. Baldwin who, through a small privately printed edition of one hundred copies, shared his prized possession with a group of fortunate scholars.

According to Lawrence C. Wroth, librarian of the John Carter Brown Library, the Declaration is referred to but once in historical writings and the only known contemporary mention of it was in a letter from an English Jesuit to a brother priest in Rome, dated August 16, 1633, in which he says, "I send you a relation of my Lord Baltemore's new plantation in Mary-land, which perhaps you will willingly see." This Mr. Wroth believes to be the printed "Declaration" which he states is never again mentioned in known sources until listed in a guide to the lesser English archives in the present century.

Until the rediscovery of this tract we have had no definite knowledge of how the young Baron of Baltimore proceeded in the days of preparation for his voyage to Maryland. By this document we learn for the first time that Cecelius Calvert had a house in London, in the very heart of the old city, and that it was from this house that he issued the earliest advertisement of his province, an alluring invitation to desirable adventurers, and a forthright declaration of motives and purposes of colonization.

It was issued by an unnamed spokesman, believed by the best authorities to have been Father White, author of the 1634 "Relation." In the Declaration we have the authoritative word, so often disputed by uninformed writers, as to Lord Baltimore's motives in founding Maryland, which are here declared as follows:

> The chiefe intention of my Lord is, and also the same ought to be of all others, who venture fortunes with him, to plant Christianity there. An intendment so full of Christian honor, making men Angels who undertake it, as never more noble Enterprise entred into English hearts. The Regions are, Alba ad messem, ready to receive the LAW of CHRIST.

The opening statement in the Declaration tells of the signing of the Charter by the King, in which he granted a "Province neare unto the English Plantation in Virginia calling it Mary-land, in honour of our most gracious Queene." The Declartation continues:

> My Lord therefore meaning to plant and people it, first with this expresse and chiefe intention to bring to CHRIST that and the Countryes adjacent, which from the beginning of the World to this day never know GOD; and then with this end, to enlarge his Majesties Empire and Dominions, and to make his Country-men sharers with him in the honour and benefit thereof, is preparing his Company out of hand, both Adventurers and others, for the Voyage. And now with large consideration, and advice of grave and experienced persons, having taken due prospect upon all those inconveniences, which a long time have hindered, and of the meanes which have helped forward other Plantntions; and having fully satisfied himselfe, not onely by the papers his noble Father, an eye-witnesse, left him, of the Excellency of the land; but by others also, who daily come from that, and the places nigh upon it, as also by the true printed Historie of Captaine Smith, who first discovered it, confirmed by hundreds living in this City of London, who have beene themselves there, and meane to returne thither againe who all goe in Conformity.

Having made clear his pious intentions and his devotion to his King, Lord Baltimore then elaborated upon the benefits to be enjoyed by those who would join him in seating his little kingdom "beyond seas." To these he—

> Proposeth many very large conditions, to such as shall for the same ends joyne with him in this honorable Action. Whereof the chiefe is this, that besides honors and place which freely he meaneth to conferre upon the merits of Bloud, Valour, Vertue, and larger Ventures of Gentlemen, for every hundred pounds ventur'd in Transportation of five able men (being twenty pound a man) which will trasport and furnish them with Armes, Tooles, Cloathes, Vtensils and Victuals for one twelve-month; whether they goe in person, or commit their men and money to my Lords Officer appointed for that purpose: or to any other who will take care of them and it, and receive and use the divident of land for their benefit; shall receive of my Lord a mannor of good land, to the full quantity of 2,000 Akers for them and their heyres for ever in that Country; besides a good share in a rich Trade hereafter mentioned, and sundry other incouragements and priviledges if they go in this first Voynge; which, when they repaye to my Lord, they shall better understand. And this for every hundred pound ventured by one or more whether more or lesse be ventured.

In a supplementary paragraph of the Declaration the promoter of Lord Baltimore's plantation gives a sidelight on the daily life of Cecilius Calvert, in which we learn that this pious knight, between his combats in which he tilted his lance against his enemies of the old Virginia Company, was actively engaged in "selling" Maryland to men of forutune, influence and adventurous spirit.

We find that Cecilius, after broadcasting his promotion tract in London and the United Kingdom, next made a gesture much in the spirit of the modern American go-getter, by turning his house "in Bloomsberry at the upper end of Holborne," into a booking office for would-be adventurers. Here, we are told in his Declaration—

> Any man desireth to adventure in this Plantation may bee informed of every particular more at large concerning Transportation and Provisions for their men, and also for the speedy raising of them, if hee repayre to the LORD BALTIMORE, who hath good advantage to assist him in those things, by reason of the many Provisions hee maketh both for himselfe and others in that kinde: Provided alwayes, that they assigne one to oversee theyr Accompts for theyr better satisfaction, and his Lordships discharge.

Calvert himself was not to be drawn into handling the funds of the prospective colonists, for, while a member of the nobility might direct a colonization enterprise and let others share in the benefit of buying "provisions for the adventurers' use in large quantities," he could not engage in trading himself to the extent of handling the money. Therefore each adventurer had to bring some one to do the bartering and to oversee the accounts.

After describing in his notable advertisement the "serene and gentle Ayre" and comparing the climate to "Sevill, Jerusalem and the best parts of Arabia Felix," Calvert gives glowing accounts of the two goodly "bayes" both "rich bosomes of fish," and makes the following remarkable explanation of the great fishing in those waters:

> For that the North-east Wind blowing ever constant from the Canary Isles, rolles the Ocean and the fish with it into Mexico-Bay, where finding no passage South nor West, is forced up North with a strong current, and sweepeth long with it great shoales of Fish, by the Cost of Florida, Virginia, Mary-land, New-England and New-found-land, which fleeing the Whales, who feed upon them, make to the Land and take the Protection of shallower waters, and inlets thereof, where they are easily taken.

Turning from the waters to the land, the document speaks glowingly of the forests of the Maryland Province. "Of the great woods with which the country is covered," the author says "oakes and walnut both blacks and white are the most common trees. Of which the oakes are so tall and straight as many of them yield beames 60 foot long and two foot and a halfe every way square. Cyprussses [illegible] and fourescore foot high before they shoot any bough." The fruits, birds and animals of the new land are enumerated and reference is made to corn "yealding 15 to 1,600 to one" in good years.

> Of gold this only can be said, that the neighboring nation commonly weareth bracclets of rude gobbets of gold about their armes; and, therefore, it is like there are mines of gold not farre off. As for Pearle, they were large chaines thereof, though deformed by burning the oisters and boring them ill.

After mentioning the many other products of Maryland, the promoter closes with the assurance that the land is one "the frutes whereof may be ensier tasted than belived."

In his advertisement Lord Baltimore announced his intention of going in person to seat his province, and invited all who were desirous of joining him to make known their resolution to him at any time within three weeks before his departure, which—> will be by the Grace of God about the 8th of September next (1633), and, adds hiss pokesman, "for his ship he goeth in (called the Arke of Mary-land, being about 400 tune) weigheth anchor from London the 20 of August and goeth about to Portsmouth, where hee intendeth himself with all his Company, to gee aboord about the time aforesayd. The Lord Baltimore's House is in Bloomsbuerry, at the upper end of Holborne in London."

But Lord Baltimore's intention of conducting his company into the promised land was doomed to disappointment. Instead of the spectacular departure planned from Portsmouth on September 8, the Ark and the Dove evidently weighed anchor at London and sailed down the channel as quickly as possible in the gray dawn of a late November morning, stopping at Cowes to take on the Catholic priests and other Romanists who had thus evaded the London searcher sent to administer the oath of allegiance.

As far back as 1832 Father McSherry, S. J., copied in Latin from the Jesuit archives in Rome, several important Maryland manuscripts, including a large part of the "Declaratio," which later appeared in Force's Historical Tracts."

Mr. Wroth has compared the Baldwin copy of the English printed "Declaration" of Lord Baltemore's Plantation in Mary-land" with the McSherry Latin copy of the "Declaraio Colonise" from Rome, which forms a part of the collection of manuscripts he terms the "McSherry Codex." He states in his illuminating preface to the Baldwin copy of the Declaration that the printed tract and the Latin manuscript are two forms of the same document. This eminent authority has pronounced Father White, author of the Maryland Relation of 1634, as the author also of the Declaration, as did the late Father Hughes.

While scholars are acquainted with the McSherry "Declaratio" transcript it is only since the recently discovered printed "Declaration" has been made accessible that we can acclaim February 10 as the three hundredth anniversary of the first public launching of Lord Baltimore's colonization plans for the founding of Maryland.

MT. LAKE PARK

"A bi-product of this depression" remarked a minister friend the other day, "is the seeming disappearance of the sympathetic interest in individual cases growing out of the present universal condition. Owing to the vast number, organized welfare is compelled to think of the whole mass, rather than the individual."

This, to a great extent, is undoubtedly true. Yet, incidents do occur which disprove this general statement.

You will remembers that last Sunday was a thoroughly disagreeable day—very cold with a penetrating wind. But, notwithstanding the natural impulse to remain in pleasant surroundings, and disregarding personal comfort, one of the fast disappearing ladies of the old school of applied Christianity, of Oakland, braved the slippery roads of the Park, and the biting winds, to carry a hot, tempting dinner to a sick girlhood friend. We wonder who got the greater kick—the good Samaritan or the sick friend?

This incident recalls an inscription below the bust of Albert Pike in the House of the Temple in Washington, which reads: "What we have done for ourselves alone dies with us; what we have done for others and the world remains and is immortal."

We were an unwilling listener to a rather amusing conversation at the post office the other morning. Two men, both apparently having fortified themselves against the biting wind, and one in some quarters suspected of being engaged in the manufacture of the "fortification," were discussing the prohibition question. The suspected manufacturer remarked, "Bill, what we need is good beer; this ————shine is too strong."

Which somehow reminds us of the story of the young wife who inquired of her milk man whether he had any ealves on his farm. He replied he had. The young mother said, "Well, you had better bring me some calf milk, as I think your cow's milk is too strong for baby."

Referring to the item last week about the first cottages built at the Park in 1882, two summer residents have written to ask us to publish short sketches of the pioneers of Mt. Lake, appending their present address, if living, and if dead the date of their death. Well, if we can secure the date, we will—if the editor will.

Mayor Utterback is in Columbus, O., in connection with a railroad rate case of some importance, now on trial.

Mrs. C. E. Hardesty, of Loch Lynn, continues to improve.

Already there is some discussion of the ticket to be put in the field at the next municipal election of Loch Lynn, which we believe is in March. Among those being mentioned are Mayor Hardesty and Mr. H. V. Leighton, for the office of Mayor.

Mr. Franklin Cook, Miss Eva Welling, and Mr. Wiley Welling, Jr. all of Cumberland, spent the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. Wiley Welling, Sr. Mrs. Welling, Jr., and her son accompanied Mr. Welling to Cumberland, where he is employed.

Miss Virginia Killius is recovering from a recent illness.

Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Utterback were called to Grafton, West Va., last week on account of the death of Mr. Utterback's grandmother, Mrs. Belle Brendle. Funeral services were conducted there on Saturday.

Miss Vivian Clary spent the past week in Morgantown, where she was engaged in work connected with the Tableland Association.

Mr. J. B. Kunkell, of Harrisburg, Pa., was a business visitor in the Park Saturday.

Mr. Harland Biggs, of the University of Maryland, spent a few days with his parents during the past week.

CHAIN STORE TAX BILL TAKEN UP BY ASSEMBLY

Proposal Before House Committee Would Put Tax Up To $150 On Chain Stores

WILL HEAR BOTH SIDES

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 15.—The ways and means committee of the House turned from consideration of the budget today to hear proponents of the proposal to place a special tax of up to $150 on chain stores, charge that the chains were putting the indepen-dent dealer out of business and taking money from the state of Maryland.

The chain organizations were pictured by the witnesses today as an octopus with tenacles reaching out to sap up the financial strength of the state and break down the former high position the merchant enjoyed in the community.

Tomorrow, the committee is sched uled to hear the opponents of the measure, and will then close all hearings on the proposition. Chairman James J. Lindsay (Dem., Baltimore county), of the committee, announced his body would then deliberate over it with a view to expediting a report to the house.

More than a dozen witnesses presented their views to the committee today, and all agreed that the chain stores, if permitted to continue to operate, would eventually run the small merchants out of business.

Samuel S. Stark, secretary of the Retail Confectioners' Association of Baltimore, carried his remarks to the point of asserting that the "innovation of chain stores did more to bring about the depression in this country than any other single item."

John M. Pohlhaus, president of the Independent Retail Grovers' Association, of Maryland, who presented the witnesses, told the committee that one of the chain store groups had an undivided surplus for "the year of the depression" (1932) of $105,000,000 or $14,000,000 more than they had at the end of the previous year. That, he said, was made while everyone else was becoming more and more in the red.

The various witnesses testified that not only are the independents being forced out of business and the money made by the chain storers being sent out of the state, but that the imposition of the special tax would be a revenue-producing measure, and one "which would be collected, not from those who already are overtaxed, but from those who can stand it well."

It was estimated by Harry W. Walker, secretary of the Independent Retail Grocers' Association, of Maryland, that the enactment of the measure would provide tax returns from Baltimore city of $100,000 annually, and from the state as a whole of $300,000.

Routine Proceedings

Cutting allowance of Garrett county Sheriff for prisoners' board from 60 cents to 40 cents. Select. Favorable. Adopted.

Delegate Fike introduced a bill in the house relating to fences in certain districts of the county.

Exempting county from law providing that one-half of fines and forfeitures shall be paid for libraries of several courts, re-committed to the Judiciary committee.

Senator McComas introduced a bill in Senate regulating the treasurer of Garrett county.

Slash Budget, Coad Says

Senator Coad reasserted his belief Tuesday that it was absolutely unnecessary to enact new taxes in order to give the needed relief to the counties and Baltimore City.

In the Senate last week a state income tax proposal was introduced, which would place a tax of one percent on incomes up to $3,000 and would graduate it up to three percent on incomes over $10,000. He estimated the enactment would bring about $4,000,000, which would be applied to the reduction of school levies in the counties.

Under Observation

Dr. and Mrs. M. C. Hinebaugh left last Thursday morning for Baltimore where Dr. Hinebaugh is under observation in Jefferson hospital, for an ailment which recently developed. He expected to leave the hospital today.

DRUM AND BUGLE CORPS MAY ATTEND INAUGURAL

Has Been Invited to Participate —Will Need About $85.00

That the drum and bugle corps of Proctor Kildow Post No. 71, American Legion, would participate in the inaugural parade in Washington on March 4, providing enough money could be raised for expenses incurred, was announced following a meeting of the corps last night.

An invitation for the corps to take part in the Presidential inaugural was received several days ago, and it was decided to accept.

About $85.00 will be needed to make the trip, it was estimated. Since the drum corps just finished paying for its uniforms a few weeks ago, there is little money left in the treasury, it was stated, and the expenses of the trip would have to be met by donations from individual citizens and local organizations. Several have already promised to contribute, it was stated, and plans are going forward for the trip.

The next meeting of the corps will be held Monday night. Russell Brown, director of the Gilbert-Brown Boys' Band, is directing the corps, and all members are urged to be present.

FRIENDSVILLE LOSES TO OAKLAND HIGH ON FRIDAY

Teams Tied for County Championship—Will Play Third Tilt

By defeating Friendsville high school basketball teams on Friday evening at the Oakland High gym, Oakland teams go into a tie for the championship of the county, both the boys' and girls' teams having won after hard fought battles. The girls won the preliminary 14 to 8, while the boys nosed out Friendsville in the closing minutes to win 24 to 19.

Oakland recently lost to Friendsville at Friendsville 35 to 29. A third game will be necessary to determine the county championship which will be played on a neutral court, Naylor's Hall, Oakland, and the Terra Alta high school gym having been suggested.

In Friday's game Oakland led 5-0 at the end of the first quarter, but at the half the count was 10-10, and Friendsville was leading 15-13 at the close of the third period. Friendsville continued to lead until just before the final whistle when Wolf and Rice sunk field goals for Oakland. Wolf and Fisher topped their teams in scoring.

The lineup and summary:

Oakland—24		Friendsville—19
Wolf	F	Selby
Peddicord	F	McCullough
Rice	C	Fisher
Lohr	G	Murphy
Compton	G	VanSickle

Field Goals—Oakland, Wolf 5, Peddicord 2, Rice 3; Friendsville, Selby 2, McCullough 2, Fisher 4.

Fouls—Oakland, Wolf 1-1; Peddicord 0-1; Rice 1-2; Lohr 1-2; Compton 1-2; Friendsville, Selby 2-3; Fisher 1-3. Referee, B. O. Aiken.

Saturday night the Oakland High reserves will play the Kappa Sigma Phi club of Cumberland.

Next Tuesday night, February 21, Oakland High will meet Kitzmiller on the local floor. Oakland defeated Kitzmiller 34-19 on February 7, Coach Thayer using his entire second team for the first time this year.

On February 23 Oakland High teams will play Davis High school in the local gym. Davis defeated Oakland on February 4. On February 28 the locals will meet Salisbury, Pa., here.

Oakland defeated Bayard at Bayard on Tuesday night 26 to 19, while the Oakland girls lost 16 to 30. Rice made nine field goals for Oakland and Wolf 3, while Casteel was high point man for Bayard with five field goals. Oakland has won the last three games played and with a string of home games now on its card, it is hoped the percentage of wins may be materially increased.

CELEBRATION OF SCOUTS' ANNIVERSARY WEEK ENDS

Father and Son Pig Roast Attended by Ninety—Rev. Trimble Gives Main Address

SCOUTS CONDUCT PROGRAM

Celebration of the twenty-third anniversary of the birthday of scouting by Oakland Troop No. 1, was concluded on Monday evening when the scouts and their dads attended a pig roast in the basement of the Lutheran church. Ninety were present, including Bill Turney and Earl Shartzer, who carved the pig. The porker was roasted by Henry Lauer, a member of the Scout Court of honor.

Rev. David C. Trimble gave the main address on the necessity of keeping the moral laws, just as everybody had to obey the laws of science and nature.

Robert Tibbetts, Donald Helbig and Ralph Lewis received their Tenderfoot badges and Harland L. Jones, chairman of the court of honor, presented the Oakland Troop with the "President Hoover Award of 1932" for achievement. The award is a streamer to be attached to the troop flag. Bernard Gonder, Jr., assistant scoutmaster, received it for the troop.

The balance of the program was turned over to the scouts who conducted knot tying, first aid, and signaling contests and presented a radio broadcasting program.

Thirty-six scouts were present at the Methodist church Sunday morning when Rev. W. S. Patterson portrayed Lincoln as having the scout qualifications, dwelling especially on four, trustworthy, friendly, brave, and reverent. Members of the troop belonging to the Catholic church, attended services at their own institution.

At the sound of the bugles on Saturday morning the entire troop mobilized within five minutes. The Fox patrol had 100 percent attendence before any other patrol. A "make believe" tragedy was announced with a number of people needing immediate medical aid. What would have been done in the case of a real tragedy, was then explained by the scouts.

The planting of the historic nuts was postponed due to inclement weather.

GRANTSVILLE MAN STRUCK BY POLE; DIES IN HOSPITAL

Receives Fractured Skull When He Slips In An Attempt To Avoid Falling Timber

FUNERAL HELD YESTERDAY

Bernard Byrus Younkin, aged 26 years, died at 9:30 o'clock Sunday evening as a result of a fractured skull received when he was caught beneath a falling 35-foot electric light pole. The accident occurred about 4:30 in the afternoon and he remained in an unconscious state until he died.

Younkin, with a number of other men from Grantsville, were engaged in erecting a pole line from the National Highway at the railroad crossing east of Grantsville, to the lodge of Marshall Pressman, about two miles east of the road along the Casselman river, the poles to be used upon which electric light wires were to be placed.

The men were prepared to erect the seventh pole of the line when it slipped from its swing and Younkin, who was side piking along with several others, failed to see in what direction the pole was falling and ran beneath it. Glimpsing for an instant the danger he was in he stopped and his foot slipping on the snow and ice the falling pole struck him on the back of his head.

He was immediately taken to the Miner's Hospital at Frostburg where he was attended by Drs. J. C. Cobey and O. L. McLane.

The deceased was the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Younkin, and besides his parents he is survived by two sisters, Rosella, at home, and Sister Eileen, St. Monica Convent, Milwaukee, Wis., and a number of relatives in Grantsville.

He was a member of the woodmen of the World Camp No. 41, Grantsville, and of the Grantsville Fire Department. He was also a member of St. Stephen's Catholic church, Grantsville, in which edifice the funeral services were conducted at nine o'clock yesterday morning, Rev. Fr. Michael, of Cumberland, officiating. Interment was made in the Grantsville cemetery.

A man giving the name of Joe Zingara, of New York, was held as the shooter. The man was quoted as saying "I kill all presidents, and I kill all officers."

Mayor Cermak was hit in the chest. The bullet pierced the body and came out his back. Little hope for his life is held.

DEATH TREE NEAR FINZEL REMOVED BY DEPARTMENT

State Highway Workers Remove Tree Which Killed Four

A big tree on the disputed boundary line between Pennsylvania and Maryland, near Finzel, which was believed responsible for the deaths of four persons in automobile accidents and, as a result, became known as "death tree," has been removed.

Through the efforts of the Somerset county branch of the Uniontown Motor Club and Chief of Police John I. Smith, of Somerset, workers this week uprooted the tree and rebuilt the berme along the highway where it stood.

A release of damages to clear the way for the improvement was obtained from adjoining property owners by the Highway Department. John Rembold, a brother-in-law of the late Congressman, Samuel A. Kendall, of Meyersdale, was killed November 26 last, when his car crashed into the tree. Victor C. Lucas, 18, and Miss Alleda Willison, 19, both of Cumberland, were killed at the same spot on January 7 while on way to Meyersdale to attend a dance. Two others also were injured and later a fourth person was killed at the same spot.

Both Pennsylvania and Maryland authorities investigated the fatalities, as there had been a dispute for some time as to the State in which the tree stood. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court ruled, it is said, that the particular strip of land on which the tree stood did not belong to either State.

Corporal Falkenstine, formerly a first-class officer, was promoted to corporal. Sergt. A. E. Markley, commander of the sub-station at Laurel, was cited for "strict attention to duty and meritorious service during the assignment with the 'hunger marchers' through Virginia and West Virginia."

William A. Gunter, Frostburg, was the speaker at the weekly meeting of the Oakland Rotary club last Friday night. Ladies' Night was also observed. Special musical numbers were given by Miss Ruth Conley and Miss Betty Jackson.

BLOOMINGTON MINER IS BELIEVED MURDER VICTIM

Case Reopened After It Had Been Decided He Had Been Killed by Railroad Train

BLOOD STAINS ARE FOUND

Garrett county authorities are of the opinion that Nelson Green, 31-year old miner, whose body was found Sunday morning on the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, near his home in Bloomington, may have been the victim of a murder.

Investigators are working on the theory that Green was slain and his body placed on the tracks to cover the alleged crime. A cerebral autopsy, performed by Dr. J. C. Wolverton, of Piedmont, W. Va., showed that Green suffered a severe blow on the head. The condition of the body strengthened the belief of investigators that Green was dead when a train struck him.

Three Held for Questioning

Green's widow and two men are under technical arrest, pending a further investigation by State's Attorney W. W. Dawson, Sheriff Walter H. Haenftling, and Coronor W. A. Gonder. About twenty persons, some of whom attended an alleged "drinking party" Saturday night at the Green home, were questioned by officers, who said conflicting statements were made by several of the guests.

Discovery of blood spots and hair outside the coal house near the Green home, and blood at the rear of the dwelling, led authorities to conduct a further investigation, after it had been decided Green met his death when struck by a train. Arrests in the case are expected within a few days, State's Attorney Dawson intimated.

Green's body was discovered at dawn Sunday morning by George Brandlin, a neighbor. Brandlin said he looked out of the window and noticed a form lying between the rails, about 75 yards from the Green home. He believed it was a pile of coal but decided to investigate when Dominic Flynn, a night watchman, who was returning home, stoped outside the Brandlin home and suggested that they walk over to the tracks.

Will Move Taxi Station and Add Garage Service

Robert Stanton, who has been operating Stanton's Taxi Service since the death of his father several years ago, has leased the property on Green street, formerly occupied by Kerins Brothers garage, and will move his taxi station to that location where he will also operate the garage.

In addition he will sub-lease the garage to Robert Winters, a mechanic, who will be in charge of repair work. He was employed until recently by E. S. Evans garage.

JESUS TEACHING BY PARABLES—THE GROWTH OF THE KINGDOM

LESSON TEXT—Mark 4:21-34.

GOLDEN TEXT—They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. Isaiah 11:9.

PRIMARY TOPIC — Sharing Our Stories for Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Into All the World.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Great Growth From Small Beginnings.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Spread of Christianity.

I. The Parable of the Candle (vv. 21-25).

The Word which is sown in the parable of the Sower (vv. 1-20) is not only to bear fruit, hut to shine forth in testimony. This obligation is enforced by a solemn command and warning. "Take heed what ye bear" (v. 24) means that there should not only be attention to what is tanght, but whole hearted reception of it.

II. The Parable of the Growing Grain (vv. 26-29).

This parable is peculiar to Mark. In the light of the purpose of Mark, it is clear why it should appear here. It is the parable for the servant. In the previous parables (vv. 24-25, cf. vv. 1-21), the responsibility of the hearer is set forth. The responsibility here is that which devolves upon the servant who proclaims the message.

1. The attitude of mind of the gospel preacher (vv. 26, 27). He should with the utmost fidelity "cast seed into the ground," preach the Word, and leave the results with God. The spiritual processes of God's Word in the soul of man are shrouded in the deepest mystery. The seed should "spring and grow up, he knoweth not how" (v. 27). When the sowing has been intelligently and faithfully done, the sower should not be burdened with anxiety. He can "sleep and rise night and day," confident that the Almighty will take care of the processes and results.

2. The processes of the spiritual life are gradual (v. 28). "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." We should not expect maturity of Christian character at once any more than the farmer should expect the crops to mature at once. The farmer has a time of sowing, of growing, and of harvest.

3. The consummation of the spiritual processes (v. 29). Though the sowing of the seed be done under difficulties and the processes of development long drawn out, the harvest will surely come.

III. The Parable of the Mustard Seed (vv. 30-34).

In this parable the plant with its great branches, called a tree in Matthew 13:32, which springs out of the small seed, exhibits the Kingdom in its mystery form, Matthew 13:11. It shows the condition of things in the world in the interval between Christ's going away and his coming again. In this parable three things claim our attention.

1. The unimportant beginning (v. 31). It begins as the least of all seeds but grows to be the greatest among herbs. The parentage and humble circumstances of Jesus greatly perplexed the people. That twelve unlettered men, most of them fishermen, should be selected as his royal advisors was still more amazing. The prophet had said of him that he would be despised, rejected, forsaken, cut off, having nothing.

2. The vigorous growth (v. 32). From the very beginning of the movement inaugurated by Christ his influence has gone forth so that there is no power or influence today in the earth so great as that which calls itself Christian.

3. The lodging capacity. The birds which find lodgment in the branches do not represent, as is commonly interpreted, the children of men who find safety and salvation in the church, because church truth is not now under consideration. It is the mystery of the Kingdom which was proclaimed as at hand by John the Baptist. This Kingdom passed into abeyance when Jesus was crucified and it shall come into realization when Jesus comes back to earth again. The believer in Christ becomes a vital part of his body and even is necessary to its strength and fruitfulness. The bird in the branches is something foreign to and independent of the tree. The branches increase the growth of the tree but birds are injurious and burdensome to it. They are predatory—waiting to pluck off the tender buds or to prey upon the ripened fruit. The effect of such lodging is evil and blighting to the tree.

Love

Love is known by its gifts, not by its receipts. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only-begotten Son." God loved; he gave. If we love, we will give. Christ said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." Then if we love him, we will demonstrate our love primarily by obeying him. And when we obey him, we will fully realize the meaning of giving because we will be anxious to tell others of Christ. Only by obedience and self-sacrifice can we walk in his steps.

SCOOP'S COLUMN

By Scoop Himself

Hen Pecked

"Hey, Shrimp, do this,"—"You flea do that,"

"Wash all the dishes and clean up the flat."

"Put on an apron, there's much work to do,"

The pants of the family are never on you.

The above was my only anonymous valentine. Ain't it a shame they have found me out already. And me married less than two years!

Wanting to find out just what kind of a duck I am, I looked under Tuesday's horoscope, which, ladies and gentlemen, happened to be Valentine's Day, and on which said day Scoop Himself appeared in this world many years ago, or so it seems; anyhow, here's the real dope: "An intelligent person is here indicated, with a scientific mind eager to experiment, and with fluency of expression. Under some aspects it may develop a malicious disposition, which should be curbed to avoid danger of frenzy, since unrestrained it might lead to mania."

Therefore when you see me foaming at the mouth you want to run. It wasn't a horoscope I saw, it was a hororscope.

* * *

It's Got Me

I give up. For no apparent reason at all it seems, I have labored for four hours on a jig-saw puzzle and enjoyed it. If anybody had told me a week ago I would ever lose sleep over a sig-jaw puzzle, I would have smiled in a patronizing way just to show that such a waste of time was beneath my dignity.

But there's something uncanny in a puzzle when it keeps the boss editor up until one o'clock, when his regular bedtime is 9.

We just stopped in to say hello. One group was working on one puzzle, another group on another. Not wanting to argue over the different pieces, Mrs. Scoop herself chose one group, and Scoop himself, the other.

"You mean to say you've been working on this for two hours and don't have it finished?" was my introduction. "Here's where this piece goes, and there's the fellow's head. If someone would just find me his ears we'd be started. The fellow's holding a glass in his hand. This is going to be a drunken brawl. That copper part looks like some of the still. There's either some coils or ropes. Maybe if we could get the border completed, we could find more pieces to fit.

"There's a fellow's pants hanging over a chair. Unless this is a bedtime scene, that's no place for them. The lady has a pretty face, but she's a brunette. And wearing a blue hat, only it isn't a hat at all, but a part of the tapestry. The still is going to be a kettle. Maybe it's a kitchen scene, and the fellow has been out in the rain, and is drying his pants before the fire, while his wife cooks supper. But there's no stove.

"It's a piano, not a kettle, and the lady is standing up before it. A very poor position in which to master the keyboard, if you ask me. But why ask me, as I have only taken ten lessons by mail, and have not yet mastered the finger movements.

"No madam, the skirt doesn't go above the lady's head, that is, if it is a skirt, and if she's a lady. It might be an umbrella. But who wants an umbrella where the lady is practicing her vocal lesson. A club would be more to their liking. The piano legs turn out to be andirons and the pants on the back of the chair are simply piano legs. The carved type, and sort of haggy at the knees just the same.

"One more section to fit up and then we'll only have two more sections to do. What's this turning up? A flower garden right in the piano!

This still might turn out to be a train wreck. There's a fellow's leg that has absolutely no connection with the torso. Suspended in mid air, if it fits where I have it now. Ladies, will you please stop shoving my coat sleeves into the pieces I already have fixed!

"Now you've done it! I would have had it all together in another minute. I had the remaining 150 pieces all figured out.

"How anybody can spend his time working these puzzles is more than I can figure. But I've done enough for one evening.

"I'll show them how to do the whole thing tomorrow in short order."

READ LABEL ON BOTTLE BEFORE USING ANY DRUG

Carelessness May Cause Irreparable Damage And Even Death

When Mrs. Brown—that is not her real name, but it will answer the purpose—had her glasses changed a few weeks ago, her oculist gave her a prescription for some eye drops to be used just before going to bed. She had the prescription filled and tucked the bottle away in her medicine chest. When she was ready for bed she took out what she thought was the right bottle—she did not bother to read the label—and dropped two or three drops —not of the eye medicine—as she supposed, but of a lotion containing a dilute solution of carbolic acid and glycerine, in her eye. Fortunately, she had plenty of warm water and other means for immediate relief, right at hand. Fortunately, again, though she had to endure several hours of excruciating pain, she was spared any permanent damage to her eyes.

"Mrs. Brown's experience shows strikingly how very important it is to read the label before using any kind of drug or medicine," Dr. R. L. Swain, Deputy Drug Commissioner of the Bureau of Food and Drugs of the State Department of Health, remarked in telling the story. "Incidentally," Dr. Swain continued, "the story is a true one, and it is only one of many similar happenings that have been brought to the attention of this Bureau recently. Luckily for 'Mrs. Brown,' her experience had a happy ending. But the careless handling of drugs does not always end that way. It is more likely to cause not only agonizing suffering, but frequently is responsible for unnecessary and irreparable damage and even death.

"The incident is a reminder, too, of the old, old adage regarding a place for everything and everything in its place. In the haste and hurry of our present way of living, the medicine chest is likely to have scant attention. It is a convenient place for dumping odds and ends of medicines and drugs —a place to reach into when emergency aid is needed for sudden illnesses or household accidents. But it is not until something like 'Mrs. Brown's' experience occurs that it is regarded as a sourse of possible danger.

"If you have not cleaned out your medicine chest recently, don't wait until housecleaning time to get at it. Get rid of the old things that you have no further use for; arrange the rest so that you can find them when you need them; separate the ones that may be a source of danger from the rest; place them so that you can see the labels and READ THE LABEL BEFORE YOU USE ANY OF THEM."

BITTINGER

When tempted to relate a tale
That someone told to you
Hold your peace and do not fail
To find out if it's true.

And though you find the tale is true,
Don't tell it if you find
When looked at from the other's view
The tale would not be kind.

While engaged in tearing down an old Model T Ford car last Saturday, Harold Brenneman, of this community, discovered hidden away behind the upholstery of the car a well preserved ten dollar bill and three one dollar bills. This find accounts for at least a portion of the money that has recently disappeared from circulation and reveals a new virtue in the much-ridiculed "old flivver."

Two local "Nimrods" recently went out on a coon hunt and when their faithful dogs barked up a tree they were convinced that they had a coon as good as captured. Neither of the hunters could climb the tree, so they built a fire under the tree and waited hours until daylight when to their chagrin they found that a large house cat had taken refuge in the tree. They shot the cat and returned home cold, coonless and crestfallen.

Joseph Gilpin, of Dry Run, was a business visitor in this village last Saturday evening.

On Thursday night of last week the mercury dropped as low as sixteen degrees below zero in the more exposed places in this community.

Harvey Broadwater, James M. Broadwater and Floyd Rounds, of the Backwoods and Bond sections of the county, were business visitors in this village one day last week.

Thomas Platter and Clarence Sell, of Jennings, and Arthur Bowser, of this village, motored to Oakland on business a few days ago.

E. S. Brenneman and his son-in-law, Lester Kisner, motored to Cumberland last Sunday to visit Mr. Kisner's wife, who is recovering from a surgical operation in one of the hospitals in that city. We understand that Mrs. Kisner's condition is very satisfactory.

THE MARYLAND BIBLE SOCIETY'S CORNER

"The Word of Our God Shall Stand Forever"

Before leaving the subject of the Vulgate translation of the Holy Scriptures, it should be mentioned that the Council of Trent, in 1546, made the Vulgate the standard text of the Bible. The Council declared that "in public lectures, disputations, in preaching, and in expositions, it shall be held as authentic, and that no one shall dare or presume, on any pretext whatever, to reject it."

It must be remembered that several editions of the Vulgate were in existence at that time, so it became necessary that either the Council itself, or the Pope, should select one edition, or order a new edition to be prepared, which should be the standard. The Pope ordered a new revision, and in the preface to the Vulgate it is stated that Pius IV commissioned some of the most eminent cardinals and distinguished linguists to prepare an accurate edition of the Latin Vulgate by using the most ancient manuscripts, comparing these with the Hebrew and Greek originals, and consulting the commentaries of the Fathers. This monumental task was carried on by Pope Pius V, and was at length finished and printed in the pontificate of Pope Sixtus V. However, when it came from the press it was so marred by typographical errors that the Pope determined to subject it to a new revision, but was prevented by death from executing his design.

Several intervening pontiffs reigned for such brief periods that nothing was accomplished until the reign of Clement VIII for whom it was reserved to complete the great task of revision in 1592. Subsequent editions were reprints of the revision completed by Pope Clement.

The Vulgate preserves from century to century the Scriptures in a language which does not change, since it is no longer one of the spoken languages of the world: thus, while it may not be a very faithful translation of the Hebrew, as some scholars affirm, yet it aids in preserving the ancient landmarks of the faith of our fathers and will be increasingly valuable in centuries to come for comparison in the every increasing flow of translations.

The Vulgate never can be the Bible of the people, for only scholars, familiar with the Latin language, can read it. However, the preservation of the Scriptures in the though forms of the Hebrew, Greek and Latin languages has an abiding value in the dissemination of the great truths of divine revelation. These translations must ever remain as the store houses or granaries from which the seed of the Word will be drawn for a world's sowing.

FRIENDSVILLE

The groundhog must have seen his shadow twice judging by the heavy snow flurries and cold weather we have been experiencing since February second.

Work on the new State road from Friendsville to the Pennsylvania State line is in progress and quite a number of men who would otherwise have nothing to do, are finding employment.

Rev. J. Busch, from Markleysburg, Pa., was a visitor with Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Hinebaugh one day last week.

Revival services will begin at the Methodist church here next week, to which all are most cordially invited.

With eggs selling at ten cents per dozen it hardly pays to gather them, but that low price helps those who have no chickens and must have eggs.

A play entitled, "The Mail Order Wife," will be presented by members of the Friendsville Military Band in the near future, the proceeds being for the benefit of the band. Date for the affair will be announced in a later issue of The Republican.

Mrs. Earl Hinebaugh was hostess at a quilting party given at her home on Wednesday. Those present were Mrs. Bertha Fike and daughter Twila, of Selbysport; Mrs. A. J. Thomas, of Guard; Mrs. A. D. Thomas, Selbysport; Mrs. Orvie Rush, Mrs. Rine, Mrs. Ray Lytle and Mrs. Leonard Lytle.

Miss Anna Katherine Schlossnagle spent Friday evening with Thelma Riley.

Kenneth Gould, of Guard, was recently placed under arrest charged with cutting a valuable tree on the premises of Mansfield Hinebaugh but was later released on bond for the action of the grand jury. The arrest was made by Constable Hinebaugh.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Riley, of Fearer, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Hinebaugh.

In Uniontown, Pa., a man arose to fix the furnace at 5:30 a. m., stepped on the back porch to get the milk before it froze, when the door blew shut and locked, leaving him "out in the cold" dressed in his night clothes, with the thermometer below zero.

DIGNIFIED SENATE GIVES BOOT TO BARRY

David S. Barry, Sergeant-at-Arms of the United States Senate, wrote an article in a magazine whose editor is Alfred E. Smith, and said:

"There are not many Senators and Representatives who sell their votes for money, and it is pretty well known who those few are."

Seventeen Senators preserved their dignity and declined to become excited. Fifty-three rose in their wrath and demanded that the offending writer be thrown out. It was a lovely exhibition of temper and indignation and must have amused the country greatly. A sense of humor is needed in these dismal days.

But on May 10 Carter Glass of Virginia, who, it is presumed, will become a member of the Cabinet of Mr. Roosevelt, made an impassioned speech on the floor of the Senate. He was discussing his banking bill. He said that certain bankers objected to the branch banking feature and asserted:

"They hired a skillful and persuasive lobbyist and paid him a salary. Worse than that, they hired some Congressmen, to my positive documentary knowledge, to oppose even that small measure of branch banking."

They "hired" some Congressmen? What does that mean? There is no possible inference other than that these Congressmen voted in accordance with their personal interests, these interests being, of course, pecuniary.

David S. Barry is dismissed from office. Senator Carter Glass, making virtually the same charge, is exempt. He is protected by the Constitution and cannot be called to account for anything he may say.

There is the difference.

But if the gentleman from Virginia has documentary evidence, should he not be urged to produce it?

A Senate committee started an inquiry into the truth of the Barry statement—that is, it listened to Barry's explanations and then insisted that he should be removed from a position he had held for fourteen years. But this action does not dispose of the far more grave charges deliberately made by a responsible Senator. However, the ruffled feelings of a Congress are evidently soothed by giving the boot to Barry.

IN DAYS OF OLD

FORTY YEARS AGO

Mumps prevailed to a large extent among people in Oakland and the surrounding community.

Mrs. E. A. Matthews and son moved from Oakland to Corinth, W. Va., where the latter was employed by the Corinth Store and Improvement Co. as clerk at a remunerative salary.

Lent began on February 15.

A branch of the Peoples' Building, Loan and Savings Association was organized in Oakland. The stockholders met and elected A. G. Sturgiss, president; A. W. Dennett, vice-president; J. C. Peddicord, secretary-treasurer; F. A. Thayer, Richard K. Maroney and A. D. Naylor, directors.

Excursion tickets for the inauguration in Washington were being sold by the Baltimore and Ohio for $8.25 for the round-trip. They were good for five days.

Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Naylor and son, of Meyersdale, Pa., arrived here to visit relatives.

TWENTY YEARS AGO

Deaths of John Oester, farmer of Cove community, and Amos Bittinger, farmer of Pleasant Valley, both of which occurred suddenly, were recorded.

A new tribe of the order of Red Men was organized at Selbysport with thirty-seven charter members.

Playford Naylor, while skating, fell and dislocated his arm.

Twenty-five men were at work harvesting ice at Mountain Lake Park. About three thousand tons had been shipped, netting the Association in the neighborhood of $600. Wages for those engaged in the work, amounting to $400, was distributed.

Over thirty cases of smallpox were reported in the Gormania community.

State road contractor J. E. Francis had a force of twenty-five men making excavations and grading on the road between McHenry and Accident.

The Lonaconing Savings Bank offered prizes in order to stimulate potato growing in Garrett and Allegany counties.

GORTNER

Daniel Spade, of Eglon, preached on "Discipleship" at the Union church in Gortner on Sunday morning.

BLOOMINGTON MINER IS BELIEVED MURDER VICTIM

spots were noticed between the rails, and more blood stains were found further down the tracks before they came upon the miner's body.

Garrett county authorities at first decided that Green was killed by a train. Several trains, including the National Limited, passed that point during the early morning hours.

Mrs. Harper Davis, another neighbor, discovered blood stains on the coal house and notified officers. Three families, including Mrs. Davis and Mrs. Green, use the coal house.

Held Drinking Party

Officers said investigation revealed that a "drinking party" was held Saturday night at the Green home. Charles "Bud" Foreback, 23, of Bloomington, who had been ordered by Green to keep away from the latter's home, about a year ago, admitted yesterday that he had been at the party "about thirty minutes," investigators said. Foreback at first denied beeing at the Green home, officers declared.

Green and his wife were separated a year ago, investigators learned, following an argument over Foreback, but they later became reconciled. Green objected to Foreback coming to the house, and orderer him to remain away, officers said. Since that time the men were not on speaking terms, and ill-feeling existed between them, it was alleged. Foreback, when questioned, said he was at the party only a short time and did not see Green.

Say He Went Out For Liquor

Irvin Sherman, 24, formerly of Moore, W. Va., who had been boarding at the Green home during the past three months, told investigators that Green left the house sometime after midnight "to get more liquor for the party." Sherman said Green did not return. Officers said they discovered blood spots on Sherman's trousers, and the man was unable to explain the stains.

Mrs. Dessie Green, the widow, also said her husband left the house after midnight, and that she never saw him again until his body was found on the tracks. Investigators said Foreback, Sherman and Mrs. Green would be subjected to further questioning.

Green was employed by the Masteller Coal company, in Hampshire, W. Va., near Bloomington. Besides his widow, Mrs. Dessie Fox Green, he is survived by a daughter, Laura Lejean; his father, John Green; two sisters, Mrs. Dolly Miller and Mrs. Ethel Fazenbaker, all of Bloomington, and a brother, Frank Green, of Kansas.

Funeral services were held at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon from the Bloomington Methodist Episcopal church, Rev. Paul Sampson, of Washington, D. C., former pastor of the officiating. Interment was made in the Bloomington cemetery.

Following an all-day investigation yesterday by county officials, Irvin Sherman was brought to the Oakland jail last night for further questioning. No formal charge was placed against the man, but he is being held pending the outcome of the prohe.

In Washington, House democratic leaders announced tentative plants to punish members who oppose the program to give Franklin D. Roosevelt drastic power of government reorganization.

In Kentucky, a cult of "unknown Tongues" is charged with promoting the murder of a mother by a son and intended slaying of six children because "The Lord commanded sacrifices."

DELUGE OF VALENTINE HEARTS AGAIN COVERS OAKLAND

The annual deluge of hearts in observance of Valentine's Day, has again covered Oakland, carrying the yearly plea of "Won't you be My Valentine?"

Sales of valentines this year was about as usual, according to Miss Frances Hamill, of the Hamill Book Store. The comic valentines are holding their popularity (or unpopularity) and the sale of this variety this year was about the average.

This practice of carrying love messages is an old custom that has always had romantic significance. In England, from which country we get our observance of the custom, the people exchanged gifts in addition to valentines.

From the files of The Republican of forty years ago, it appears that the enthusiasm for Valentine's Day was diminishing. The following story appeared in The Republican in this connection:

"Tuesday was the anniversary most dear to romantic and loving souls. Although the enthusiasm formerly attending the celebration has diminished materially of late years, the mere mention of St. Valentine, or the date sacred to him, is still and will always be sufficient to quicken the pulsation of every impressionable heart.

"It is within the memory of men now in the prime of life when every male of the age of six or eight years and upward religiously sent a valentine to his most favored lady love on February 14. Some of these valentines were most elaborate and expensive, costing as much as $10. The valentine business in those days was one of the sheet anchors of the book and stationery trade and was almost on a par with the Christmas present business.

"Everyone knows that this custom of sending valentines has fallen into comparative disuse. Perhaps it was the intrusion of the comic and vulgar valentine that crippled it. But the sentiment which underlays it still survives unimpaired and will survive while the universe lasts.

"'Tis love that makes the world go 'round!"

In Charleston, W. Va., the State Tax Commissioner reported that medicinal liquor stamps issued in the three months ending January 31 totalled $6,856.00. This is far short of estimated revenue.

In Washington, during the period ended December 31, 1932, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, granted a total of 1882 loans amounting to $1,623,704,844, and in addition, under the Emergency Relief Act made available an additional sum of $173,902,956.

In Chicago, an attempt to extort $6,000 from a prominent Baltimore woman was foiled with the arrest of two men. The intended victim is Mrs. Catherine Thilo, mother-in-law of William S. Purnell, former Assistant U. S. Attorney.

In Washington, the House Committee on Banking and Currency, seeks to broaden the powers of the R. F. C., so as to include emergency loans to public school districts to aid in financing operation and maintenance, including payment of salaries of teachers and employes.

Today's Issue Marks Start on Another Milestone of Service

With today's issue The Republican enters upon its fifty-seventh year, having been founded on February 28, 1877, the first number appearing the following Saturday, March 4, 1877.

At that time the Garrett County Herald, published by the late Hiram P. Tasker, was still in existence, but it ceased publication sometime afterward. The Herald was a Democratic organ and was succeeded later by the present Democratic publication in Oakland, which was established by Mr. M. R. Hamill, of Oakland, and the late John J. Smith, the first issue being printed and circulated on February 4, 1878, nearly a year after the publication of the first issue of The Republican.

The late Capt. James A. Hayden, of Mountain Lake Park, was The Republican's founder and its editor until July 4, 1890, when the present published took charge. The paper has had but two owners and is the oldest established business enterprise in the county that has continued through the years uninterruptedly.

The subscription list of The Republican, conceded to be Garrett county's leading newspaper, is approximately 500 more than any other newspaper published in Garrett county and is steadily gaining new patrons both in the advertising and subscription fields.

BUY AT HOME

By MILLER LOWEN

A campaign has been started to "Buy American," so let us look behind the scenes and determine the reason for it. The first and main reason for this campaign is to give work to Americans and to keep the American dollar in America. A second reason is to uphold the standard of American labor. During the last Presidential campaign, President Hoover gave a comparison of the wage of laborers in the different countries, and you recall that America ranked first. Another reason is loyalty to our own country. Let me elucidate by telling of two incidents.

In the manufacture of any article the labor involved plays a large part in the total cost of the article. In Japan, a laborer, or coolie, is paid but a few cents a day, so the labor charge is small in any process of manufacture. For this reason, electric light bulbs can be made in Japan, transported to this country, an import duty paid and still be sold for a price below that of an American manufacturer. But as is usually the case in the purchase of cheap goods, the buyer soon finds out he has not made such a good bargain. Perhaps Japan can make as good electric light bulbs as any American factory, but they have not proven it. As you may know, electric light bulbs are grouped as to the number of watts of electrical energy they consume per hour, that is, ten watts, forty watts, fifty watts, and so on. Two forty watt bulbs will cost the same to operate, but they may not give the same amount of light. The amount of light given off can be measured as so many candlepower. The bulb which gives off the greater number of candlepower for each watt consumed is the better bulb.

Edison's first carbon filament bulb gave off but very few candlepower per watt, while the modern bulb gives off a much greater amount. This improvement has been made possible through experiments conducted by the large American manufacturers. A comparison of the American bulb and the Japanese bulb will show the American bulb as the more efficient and therefore the cheaper to operate. Although this is true, and although the American companies have tried to advertise the truth about their products, the average purchaser of bulbs is either ignorant of the truth or has been swayed by the low price of the Japanese bulb.

Tt get the most service for your money, you should buy the American made bulb. Further, for every Japanese bulb bought just one less American bulb is sold.

The effect has been to decrease the output of the American factory with its resultant decrease in employment. Therefore, for the sake of your fellow countrymen, make sure the electric light bulbs you buy in the future are marked "Made in America."

A second example of foreign competition is in the steel industry. European manufacturers can ship steel to the eastern port of our country and charge a lower price than a manufacturer in Pittsburgh can sell his product in the same place. It is being done today, much to the dismay of the American steel industry.

Do you wonder, "Who are the purchasers of this foreign product?" I read in a steel magazine not long ago that a prominent mail order house had bought a large shipment of foreign fence wire and nails. This being true, the foreign product has been distributed over our whole country. I do not blame the importation of foreign steel for all the trouble in the steel industry, but certainly the return of this foreign trade to American manufacturers would mean more work for our mills. The next time you purchase any article made of iron or steel, make certain the article is "Made in America."

If a campaign to "Buy America" is wise, would it not be just as wise to wage a campaign to "Buy at Home"? Are you truly giving your home town or community merchant a fair deal when you send your money away from home to buy an article he can sell you? The average merchant is fair in his dealings. He is in business to make money, but he asks only a fair profit on his investment. He offers a service to you that no one else can offer, and for that service he asks but a small profit. He is usually one of the large taxpayers in the community and is giving employment to several people. Your community merchant is one of you; he is intersted in you; he is pleased with your patronage and therefore is deserving of your support.

The statement has been made that we buy a foreign product. We have the product and the foreigner has our dollar. If we buy our own product, we get the product and keep the dollar. Does this not apply to any community?

Why not accept the slogan, "Buy American in your Own Home Town"?

The next time you plan to buy away from home, consult your community dealer first. He will be only too glad to serve you better than his "out of town" competitor can possibly serve you.

If you would have your community prosperous you must "BUY AMERICAN IN YOUR OWN HOME TOWN."
